I. AGENCY IDENTITY AND CONTRACTING OFFICE

The primary role of the National Nuclear Security Administration Office of Secure Transportation (OST) (NA-15) is to provide safe and secure transportation of nuclear weapons, nuclear weapon components and special nuclear material in support of the national security of the United States of America. The operations facilities support the operational duties of the Federal agents who are responsible for the daily safeguard and transport of nuclear weapons, components, test assemblies, and strategic quantities of weapons grade special nuclear material up to and including Secret Restricted Data (SRD).

OST shipments are conducted in a manner to ensure the security and safety of the cargo. The personnel who operate the transportation vehicles and the escort vehicles are federal agents. The OST annual budget is about $250 million. The OST monitors weather from their operations center and weather checks are performed every two hours. In 2012, OST employed about 350 couriers. It employs military veterans, particularly ex-special-operations forces. Besides dealing with "irregular hours, personal risks, and exposure to inclement weather," agents "may be called upon to use deadly force if necessary to prevent the theft, sabotage or takeover of protected materials by unauthorized persons.

Through an active liaison program, NNSA maintains an emergency contact directory of federal and state response organizations located throughout the contiguous United States. During a convoy emergency, an open communications line is established and maintained between the control center and the appropriate state agencies. This way a continuous update of information from the scene can be relayed to the responding units. The OST has a system of emergency response including initial notification, monitoring and assessment of the situation, and working with other agencies in support of this vital national security function.
