SEC. 109. MORTGAGE FORBEARANCE.

(a) FINDINGS.—

(1) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(A) the collection of debts involves the use of the mails and wires and other instrumentalities of interstate commerce;

(B) at times of major disaster or emergency, the income of consumers is often impaired and their necessary daily expenses often increase;
(C) temporary forbearance benefits not only consumer and small business debtors, but also other creditors by avoiding downward collateral price spirals triggered by an increase in foreclosure activity;

(D) without forbearance, many consumers and small businesses are unlikely to be able to pay their obligations according to their original terms and are likely to default on obligations or file for bankruptcy, resulting in reduced recoveries for creditors, and in the case of bankruptcy, no recovery of unaccrued interest;

(E) with forbearance, creditors are likely to realize greater long-term value because consumers and small businesses will be more likely to be able to repay their obligations after the major disaster or emergency has subsided;

(F) the legislative and administrative response to major disasters and emergencies may consist of multiple components divided among different statutes and programs; and

(G) when evaluating whether property has been taken from a person without just compensation, a holistic evaluation of the burdens and benefits of all legislative and administrative responses, including indirect benefits from macro-roeconomic stabilization, is appropriate.

(2) FURTHER FINDINGS REGARDING MORTGAGE FORBEARANCE.—Congress further finds that—

(A) ensuring that consumers are able to remain in their residences reduces the disruptions and economic harm caused by such disasters and emergencies by ensuring that consumers are able to continue their existing employment, education, childcare, and healthcare arrangements, which are often geographically-based;

(B) temporary forbearance on residential mortgages is therefore critical to fostering economic recovery and stability in the wake of major disasters or emergencies;

(C) temporary mortgage forbearance during a declared disaster benefits not only mortgagors, but also mortgagees because mortgagors’ ability to pay is likely to be restored after a disaster or emergency subsides, so forbearance may increase mortgagors’ total recovery.
Without forbearance, mortgagors are likely to default or file for bankruptcy, resulting in significant losses for mortgagees; and
(D) temporary mortgage forbearance during a declared disaster also benefits the mortgagees of other properties because housing prices are geographically and serially correlated so an increase in foreclosures can drive down the value of collateral for all mortgage lenders, further destabilizing the economy.

(3) FURTHER FINDINGS REGARDING MORTGAGE SERVICERS.—Congress further finds that—

(A) mortgage servicers are often contractually obligated to advance scheduled mortgage payments to securitization investors, irrespective of whether the servicer collects the payment from the mortgagor;

(B) mortgage servicers are often thinly capitalized and with limited capacity for engaging in large scale advancing of payments to securitization investors;

(C) securitization investors have long been aware of servicers’ thin capitalization;

(D) in the wake of the 2008 financial crisis, several servicers had difficulty obtaining sufficiently liquidity to make advances;

(E) mortgage servicing is a heavily regulated industry;
(F) in response to the 2008 financial crisis, Congress created a safe harbor for mortgage servicers that undertook loan modifications;

(G) in response to the 2008 financial crisis, the Home Affordable Modification Program paid mortgage servicers to undertake loan modifications;

(H) as part of the 2012 joint State-Federal National Mortgage Settlement, mortgage servicers committed to undertaking loan modifications; and

(I) investors in mortgage securitizations are or should be aware of servicers’ thin capitalization, liquidity constraints, the extent and history of servicing regulation and therefore do not have a reasonable expectation that the terms of servicing contracts will be enforceable at times of national financial crisis.

(4) DETERMINATION.—It is the sense of the Congress that, on the basis of the findings described under paragraphs (1), (2), and (3), the Congress determines that the provisions of this Act are necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying into execution the powers of the Congress to regulate commerce among the several States and to establish uniform bankruptcy laws.

(b) Prohibition on Foreclosures and Repossessions During the COVID–19 Emergency.—

SEC. 207. MINORITY DEPOSITORY INSTITUTION.

(a) Sense of Congress on Funding the Loan-Loss Reserve Fund for Small Dollar Loans.—The sense of Congress is the following:

(1) The Community Development Financial Institutions Fund (the “CDFI Fund”) is an agency of the Department of the Treasury, and was established by the Riegle Community Development and Regulatory Improvement Act of 1994. The mission of the CDFI Fund is “to expand economic opportunity for underserved people and communities by supporting the growth and capacity of a national network of community development lenders, investors, and financial service providers”. A community development financial institution (a “CDFI”) is a specialized financial institution serving low-income communities and a Community Development Entity (a “CDE”) is a domestic corporation or partnership that is an intermediary vehicle for the provision of loans, investments, or financial counseling in low-income communities. The CDFI Fund certifies CDFIs and CDEs. Becoming a certified CDFI or CDE al-allows organizations to participate in various CDFI Fund programs as follows:

(A) The Bank Enterprise Award Program, which provides FDIC-insured depository institutions awards for a demonstrated increase in lending and investments in distressed communities and CDFIs.

(B) The CDFI Program, which provides Financial and Technical Assistance awards to CDFIs to reinvest in the CDFI, and to build the capacity of the CDFI, including financing product development and loan loss reserves.

(C) The Native American CDFI Assistance Program, which provides CDFIs and sponsoring entities Financial and Technical Assistance awards to increase lending and grow the number of CDFIs owned by Native Americans to help build capacity of such CDFIs.

(D) The New Market Tax Credit Program, which provides tax credits for making equity investments in CDEs that stimulate capital investments in low-income communities.

(E) The Capital Magnet Fund, which provides awards to CDFIs and nonprofit affordable housing organizations to finance affordable housing solutions and related economic development activities.

(F) The Bond Guarantee Program, a source of long-term, patient capital for CDFIs to expand lending and investment capacity for community and economic development purposes.

(2) The Department of the Treasury is authorized to create multi-year grant programs designed to encourage low-to-moderate income individuals to establish accounts at federally insured banks, and to improve low-to-moderate income individuals’ access to such accounts on reasonable terms.

(3) Under this authority, grants to participants in CDFI Fund programs may be used for loan-loss reserves and to establish small-dollar loan programs by subsidizing related losses. These grants also allow for the providing recipients with the financial counseling and education necessary to conduct transactions and manage their accounts. These loans provide low-cost alternatives to payday loans and other nontraditional forms of financing that often impose excessive interest rates and fees on borrowers, and lead millions of Americans to fall into debt traps. Small-dollar loans can only be made pursuant to terms, conditions, and practices that are reasonable for the individual consumer obtaining the loan.

(4) Program participation is restricted to eligible institutions, which are limited to organizations listed in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code and exempt from tax under 501(a) of such Code, federally insured depository institutions, community development financial institutions and State, local, or Tribal government entities.

(5) Since its founding, the CDFI Fund has awarded over $3,300,000,000 to CDFIs and CDEs, allocated $54,000,000,000 in tax credits, and $1,510,000,000 in bond guarantees. According to the CDFI Fund, some programs attract as much as $10 in private capital for every $1 invested by the CDFI Fund. The Administration and the Congress should prioritize appropriation of funds for the loan loss reserve fund and technical assistance programs administered by the Community Development Financial Institution Fund, as included in the version of the “Financial Services and General Government Appropriations Act, 2020” (H.R. 3351) that passed the House of Representatives on June, 26, 2019.

SEC. 502. DIVERSE INVESTMENT ADVISERS.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) Diverse individual-owned and controlled firms continue to face obstacles, such as discrimination and other related barriers, when competing for investment adviser services opportunities, including Federal opportunities.
(2) The Government Accountability Office found in September 2017 that asset management firms (also known as firms providing investment adviser services) registered in the United States manage more than $70,000,000,000,000 of assets and that minority- and women-owned asset management firms manage less than 1 percent of such assets.

(3) Conscious efforts to facilitate diverse and inclusive firm selection for investment advisers services opportunities are required to overcome obstacles facing diverse individual-owned and controlled firms, especially as women- and minority-owned businesses across the financial services sector struggle to recover from the impacts of the coronavirus disease (COVID–19) outbreak and future major disasters.

(4) Despite evidence that women and minority-owned firms perform as well as and sometimes outperform their industry counterparts, they are not consistently selected to manage institutional assets. Although women and minority-owned firms account for approximately 8.6 percent of the asset management industry, recent reports show that they only manage 1.1 percent of all assets under management or $785 billion out of $71.4 trillion, and are under-represented as managers in every asset class.

DIVISION P—FEDERAL EMPLOYEE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AND OFFICIAL TIME

SEC. 160001. SHORT TITLE.

This division may be cited as the “Protecting Collective Bargaining and Official Time for Federal Workers Act”.

SEC. 160002. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) Federal Unions play a critical role in protecting the rights of Federal workers by allowing members to have a collective voice on the job and in the legislative process, advance issues for working families, ensure equal opportunities for all workers, and raise the standards by which all professional and technical workers are employed.

(2) Collective bargaining is essential to the union process, because it provides mutual agreement between all parties that fosters harmonious relationships between the Federal Government and its employees and protects the interest of both parties.
(3) The current administration has acted through Executive Orders and official memorandums to dismantle Federal Unions and undermine their collective bargaining rights across the Federal workforce and these directives have already negatively impacted labor contracts, both signed and under active negotiation.

(4) These orders set an aggressive schedule for unions to engage in collective bargaining, while also slashing the unions official time for performing union duties by over 91 percent in some cases. These actions are limiting the ability for unions to prepare for negotiations and perform their legally required employee representational duties.

(5) Section 7101(a) of title 5, United States Code, states, “Congress finds that labor organizations and collective bargaining in the civil service are in the public interest.”. Attempting to eliminate the Union by eliminating almost all its official time repudiates the statutory position that unions are in the public interest.

(6) Through these orders, agencies are required to comply with artificial bargaining schedules, which undermine good faith negotiations and divert the decision-making to an impasse panel, which has no union representation on it and does not represent both parties.

(7) Collectively, the administration’s actions have violated Congressional intent, undermined the ability of unions to engage in collective bargaining, and threatened the rights and benefits of millions of Federal workers.

SEC. 160003. NULLIFICATION OF EXECUTIVE ORDERS RELATING TO FEDERAL EMPLOYEE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING.

Each of the following Executive Orders and presidential memorandum are rescinded and shall have no force or effect:

(1) Executive Order 13837 (relating to the use of official time).

(2) Executive Order 13836 (relating to Federal collective bargaining).

An air carrier receiving financial assistance under section 101 shall take such action as is necessary to ensure that, with respect to the national emergency declared by the President under the National Emergencies Act (50
U.S.C. 1601 et seq.) related to the pandemic of the coronavirus COVID–19—

(1) if an employee of such air carrier was provided health insurance benefits or other welfare benefits described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of section 3(1) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1002(1)) from the air carrier prior to such emergency, such employee shall retain such benefits at an equivalent rate for the duration of such emergency;

such employee would have received if the employee contingent on the employee making an employee contribution or elective deferral, the employer contribution is required only to the extent the employee makes the payment to the plan with respect to such contributions or deferrals. No such payment may exceed the amount the employee would have been permitted or required to contribute had the employee remained continuously employed by the employer throughout the period of service. Any payment to the plan de-

the period—

(A) beginning on the date on which the covered air carrier first receives Federal financial assistance; and

(B) ending on the date that is 10 years after the date on which the covered air carrier last receives Federal financial assistance.
(3) Debtor in possession.—The term “debtor in possession” has the meaning given such term in section 1101 of title 11, United States Code.

(4) Federal financial assistance.—The term “Federal financial assistance” means financial assistance or a credit instrument received from the Federal Government under this Act.

(5) Trustee.—The term “trustee” means a trustee appointed in a case commenced by, or commenced against, a covered air carrier under title 11, United States Code.

(b) Limitation.—If a covered air carrier commences a case or if an involuntary case is commenced against a covered air carrier under title 11, United States Code, during the covered period with respect to the covered air carrier, the covered air carrier, the debtor in possession, or the trustee may not seek a rejection of, or interim relief from, a collective bargaining agreement under—

(1) section 1113 of title 11, United States Code; or

(2) any other provision of law.

SEC. 210. INCREASED WAGE PRIORITY.

Section 507(a) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (4)—
(A) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) and (B) as clauses (i) and (ii), respectively;

(B) in the matter preceding clause (i), as so redesignated, by inserting “(A)” before “Fourth”;

(C) in subparagraph (A), as so designated, in the matter preceding clause (i), as so redesignated—

(i) by striking “$10,000” and inserting “$20,000”;

(ii) by striking “within 180 days”;

and

(iii) by striking “or the date of the cessation of the debtor’s business, whichever occurs first,”; and

(D) by adding at the end the following:

“(B) Severance pay described in subparagraph (A)(i) shall be deemed earned in full upon the layoff or termination of employment of the individual to whom the severance is owed.”;

(2) in paragraph (5)—

(ii) by striking “or the date of the cessation of the debtor’s business, whichever occurs first”; and

(B) by striking subparagraph (B) and inserting the following:

“(B) for each such plan, to the extent of the number of employees covered by each such plan, multiplied by $20,000.”.

SEC. 211. REJECTION OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1113 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by striking subsections (a) through (f) and inserting the following:

“(a) The debtor in possession, or the trustee if one has been appointed under this chapter, other than a trustee in a case covered by subchapter IV of this chapter and by title I of the Railway Labor Act (45 U.S.C. 151 et seq.), may reject a collective bargaining agreement only in accordance with this section. In this section, a reference to the trustee includes the debtor in possession.

“(b) No provision of this title shall be construed to permit the trustee to unilaterally terminate or alter any provision of a collective bargaining agreement before complying with this section. The trustee shall timely pay all monetary obligations arising under the terms of the collective bargaining agreement. Any such payment required to be made before a plan confirmed under section 1129 is effective has the status of an allowed administrative expense under section 503.

“(c)(1) If the trustee seeks modification of a collective bargaining agreement, the trustee shall provide notice to the labor organization representing the employees covered by the collective bargaining agreement that modifications are being proposed under this section, and shall promptly provide an initial proposal for modifications to the collective bargaining agreement. Thereafter, the trustee shall confer in good faith with the labor organization, at reasonable times and for a reasonable period in light of the complexity of the case, in attempting to reach mutually acceptable modifications of the collective bargaining agreement.

“(2) The initial proposal and subsequent proposals by the trustee for modification of a collective bargaining agreement shall be based upon a business plan for the reorganization of the debtor, and shall reflect the most complete and reliable information available. The trustee shall provide to the labor organization all information that is relevant for negotiations. The court may enter a protective order to prevent the disclosure of information if disclosure could compromise the position of the debtor with respect to the competitors in the industry of the debtor, subject to the needs of the labor organization to evaluate the proposals of the trustee and any application for rejection of the collective bargaining agreement or for interim relief pursuant to this section.

“(3) In consideration of Federal policy encouraging the practice and process of collective bargaining and in recognition of the bargained-for expectations of the employees covered by the collective bargaining agreement, modifications proposed by the trustee—

“(A) shall be proposed only as part of a program of workforce and nonworkforce cost savings devised for the reorganization of the debtor, including savings in management personnel costs;

“(B) shall be limited to modifications designed to achieve a specified aggregate financial contribution for the employees covered by the collective bargaining agreement (taking into consideration any labor cost savings negotiated within the 12-month period before the filing of the petition), and shall be not more than the minimum savings essential to permit the debtor to exit bankruptcy, such that confirmation of a plan of reorganization is not likely to be followed by the liquidation, or the need for further financial reorganization, of the debtor (or any successor to the debtor) in the short term; and “(C) shall not be disproportionate or overly burden the employees covered by the collective bargaining agreement, either in the amount of the cost savings sought from such employees or the nature of the modifications.
“(d)(1) If, after a period of negotiations, the trustee and the labor organization have not reached an agreement over mutually satisfactory modifications, and further negotiations are not likely to produce mutually satisfactory modifications, the trustee may file a motion seeking rejection of the collective bargaining agreement after notice and a hearing. Absent agreement of the parties, no such hearing shall be held before the expiration of the 21-day period beginning on the date on which notice of the hearing is provided to the labor organization representing the employees covered by the collective bargaining agreement.
Only the debtor and the labor organization may appear and be heard at such hearing. An application for rejection shall seek rejection effective upon the entry of an order granting the relief.

“(2) In consideration of Federal policy encouraging the practice and process of collective bargaining and in recognition of the bargained-for expectations of the employees covered by the collective bargaining agreement, the court may grant a motion seeking rejection of a collective bargaining agreement only if, based on clear and convincing evidence—

“(B) the court has considered alternative proposals by the labor organization and has concluded that such proposals do not meet the requirements of subsection (c)(3)(B);

“(C) the court finds that further negotiations regarding the proposal of the trustee or an alternative proposal by the labor organization are not likely to produce an agreement;

“(D) the court finds that implementation of the proposal of the trustee shall not—

778

... by the collective bargaining agreement;

“(ii) adversely affect the ability of the debtor to retain an experienced and qualified workforce; or

“(iii) impair the labor relations of the debtor such that the ability to achieve a feasible reorganization would be compromised; and

“(E) the court concludes that rejection of the collective bargaining agreement and immediate implementation of the proposal of the trustee is essential to permit the debtor to exit bankruptcy, such that confirmation of a plan of reorganization is not likely to be followed by liquidation, or the need for further financial reorganization, of the debtor (or any successor to the debtor) in the short term.

“(3) If the trustee has implemented a program of incentive pay, bonuses, or other financial returns for insiders, senior executive officers, or the twenty next most highly compensated employees or consultants providing services to the debtor during the bankruptcy, or such a program was implemented within 180 days before the date of the filing of the... petition, the court shall presume that the trustee has failed to satisfy the requirements of subsection (c)(3)(C).

“(4) In no case shall the court enter an order rejecting a collective bargaining agreement that would result in modifications to a level lower than the level proposed by the trustee in the proposal found by the court to have complied with the requirements of this section.

“(5) At any time after the date on which an order rejecting a collective bargaining agreement is entered, or in the case of a collective bargaining agreement entered into between the trustee and the labor organization providing mutually satisfactory modifications, at any time after that collective bargaining agreement has been entered into, the labor organization may apply to the court for an order seeking an increase in the level of wages or benefits, or relief from working conditions, based upon changed circumstances. The court shall grant the request only if the increase or other relief is not inconsistent with the standard set forth in paragraph (2)(E).

in effect and a motion for rejection of the collective bargaining agreement has been filed, if essential to the continuation of the business of the debtor or in order to avoid irreparable damage to the estate, the court, after notice and a hearing, may authorize the trustee to implement interim changes in the terms, conditions, wages, benefits, or work rules provided by the collective bargaining agreement. Any hearing under this subsection shall be scheduled in accordance with the needs of the trustee. The implementation of such interim changes shall not render the application for rejection moot and may be authorized for not more than 14 days in total.

“(f)(1) Rejection of a collective bargaining agreement constitutes a breach of the collective bargaining agreement, and shall be effective no earlier than the entry of an order granting such relief.

“(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), solely for purposes of determining and allowing a claim arising from the rejection of a collective bargaining agreement, rejection shall be treated as rejection of an ex-cecutory contract under section 365(g) and shall be allowed or disallowed in accordance with section 502(g)(1). No claim for rejection damages shall be limited by section 502(b)(7). Economic self-help by a labor organization shall be permitted upon a court order granting a motion to reject a collective bargaining agreement under subsection (d) or pursuant to subsection (e), and no provision of this title or of any other provision of Federal or State law may be construed to the contrary.

“(g) The trustee shall provide for the reasonable fees and costs incurred by a labor organization under this section, upon request and after notice and a hearing.

“(h) A collective bargaining agreement that is assumed shall be assumed in accordance with section 365.”.

(b) Prohibition on Modification of Retiree Benefits.—Section 1114 of title 11, United States Code, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

“(n) Notwithstanding any other provision in this title, the trustee may not modify retiree benefits if the debtor is an air carrier, as such term is defined in section 40102 of title 49, United States Code, or an affiliate of such air carrier, that received assistance under the Emergency Pension Plan Relief Act of 2020.”.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is hereby established, within the Office of the Secretary of Transportation, the Office of Airline Industry Financial Oversight.

(b) DIRECTOR OF OFFICE.—The office established under this section shall be headed by a Director, who shall be a career employee of the Department of Transportation and selected on the basis of such individual’s knowledge of financial markets, airline operations, and finance, and such other qualifications as the Secretary considers relevant.

(3) require each such air carrier to conduct an annual stress test to determine the extent of financial stress that the air carrier can withstand before becoming financially insolvent, using at least 3 sets of assumptions regarding the severity of financial stress and to report the results of such test to the Office for analysis;

(4) based on an analysis of the stress tests performed under paragraph (3), annually adjust the minimum capital and funding requirements imposed under paragraph (2); and

For purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), the term “modified funded percentage” means the percentage

(B) not exceed the greater of—

(i) a rate 0.2 percentage points higher than such rate of interest on such date; or

(ii) the plan is reasonably expected to be able to pay benefits and the interest on the loan during such period and to accumulate sufficient funds to repay the principal when due;

(B) provide the plan’s most recently filed Form 5500 as of the date of application and any other information necessary to determine the loan amount under subsection (d);

(2) STANDARD FOR ACCEPTING ACTUARIAL AND PLAN SPONSOR DETERMINATIONS AND DEMONSTRATIONS IN THE APPLICATION.—In evaluating the plan sponsor’s application, the Director of the Pension Rehabilitation Administration shall accept the determinations and demonstrations in the application unless the Director, in consultation with the Director of the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Labor, concludes that any such determinations or demonstrations in the application (or any underlying assumptions) are clearly erroneous or are inconsistent with any rules issued by the Director pursuant to subsection (g).

(3) Required actions; deemed approval.—

The Director of the Pension Rehabilitation Administration shall approve any application under this subsection within 90 days after the submission of such application unless such application is incomplete or the Director makes a conclusion described in paragraph (2) with respect to the application. An application shall be deemed approved unless, within such 90 days, the Director notifies the plan sponsor of the denial of such application and the reasons for such denial. Any approval or denial of an application by the Director of the Pension Rehabilitation Administration shall be treated as a final agency action for purposes of section 704 of title 5, United States Code. The Pension Rehabilitation Administration shall make the loan pursuant to any application promptly after the approval of such application.

(B) PLANS WITH SUSPENDED BENEFITS.—In the case of a plan with respect to which a suspension of benefits has been approved under section 432(e)(9) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and section 305(e)(9) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1085(e)(9)) or under section 418E of such Code—

(2) COORDINATION WITH PBGC FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.—
(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a plan which is also applying for financial assistance under section 4261(d) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1431(d))—

“(A) which is in critical and declining status (within the meaning of section 305(b)(6)) as of the date of the enactment of this subsection or during the 2-year period beginning on such date, or with respect to which a suspension of benefits has been approved under section 305(e)(9) as of such date;

“(B) which, as of such date of enactment or during such period, is in critical status (within the meaning of section 305(b)(2)), has a modified funded percentage of less than 40 percent (as defined in section 504(a)(1) of the Rehabilitation for Multiemployer Pensions Act of 2020), and has a ratio of active to inactive participants which is less than 2 to 5; or

“(C) which is insolvent for purposes of section 418E of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 as of such date of enactment or during such period, if the plan became insolvent after December 16, 2014, and has not been terminated; and which is applying for a loan under section 504(a) of the Rehabilitation for Multiemployer Pensions Act of 2020 may also apply to the corporation for financial assistance under this subsection, by jointly submitting such applications in accordance with section 4(d)(2) of such Act. The application for financial assistance under this subsection shall demonstrate, based on projections by the plan actuary, that after the receipt of the anticipated loan amount under section 4(a) of such Act, the plan will still become (or remain) insolvent within the 30-year period beginning on the date of the loan.

“(2) In reviewing an application under paragraph (1), the corporation shall review the determinations and demonstrations submitted with the loan application under section 504(c) of the Rehabilitation for Multiemployer Pensions Act of 2020 and provide guidance regarding such determinations and demonstrations prior to approving any application for financial assistance under this subsection. The corporation may deny any application if any such determinations or demonstrations (or any underlying assumptions) are clearly erroneous, or inconsistent with rules issued by the corporation, and the plan and the corporation are unable to reach agreement on such determinations or demonstrations. The corporation shall prescribe any such rules or guidance not later than August 31, 2020.

“(3) In the case of a plan described in paragraph (1)(A) or (1)(B), the total financial assistance provided under this subsection shall be an amount equal to the smallest portion of the loan amount with respect to the plan under paragraph (1)(A) or (1)(B)(ii) of section 504(d) of the Rehabilitation for Multiemployer Pensions Act of 2020 (determined without regard to paragraph (2) thereof) that, if provided as financial assistance under this subsection instead of a loan, would allow the plan to avoid the projected insolvency.

“(4) In the case of a plan described in paragraph (1)(C), the financial assistance provided pursuant to such application under this subsection shall be the present value of the amount (determined by the plan actuary and submitted on the application) that, if such amount were paid by the corporation in combination with the loan and any other assistance being provided to the plan by the corporation at the time of the application, would enable the plan to emerge from insolvency and avoid any other insolvency projected under paragraph (1).

“(5)(A)(i) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), if the corporation determines at the time of approval, or at the beginning of any plan year beginning thereafter, that the plan’s 5-year expenditure projection (determined without regard to loan payments described in clause (iii)(III)) exceeds the fair market value of the plan’s assets, the corporation shall (subject to the total amount of financial assistance approved under this subsection) provide such assistance in an amount equal to the lesser of—
“(I) the amount by which the plan’s 5-year expenditure projection exceeds such fair market value; or “(II) the plan’s expected expenditures for the plan year.

“(I) receive or respond to 9–1–1 calls; or “(II) dispatch emergency responders.”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

“(j) Severability Clause.—If any provision of this section or the application thereof to any person or cir-and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.’’

SEC. 503. PROHIBITION ON 9–1–1 FEE OR CHARGE DIVERSION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—If the Commission obtains evidence that suggests the diversion by a State or taxing jurisdiction of 9–1–1 fees or charges, the Commission shall submit such information, including any information regarding the impact of any underfunding of 9–1–1 services in the State or taxing jurisdiction, to the interagency strike force established under subsection (c).

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Beginning with the first report under section 6(f)(2) of the Wireless Communications and Public Safety Act of 1999 (47 U.S.C. 615a–1(f)(2)) that is required to be submitted after the date that is 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commission shall include in each report required under such section all evidence that suggests the diversion by a State or taxing jurisdiction of 9–1–1 fees or charges, including any information regarding the impact of any underfunding of 9–1–1 services in the State or taxing jurisdiction.

(e) INTERAGENCY STRIKE FORCE TO END 9–1–1 FEE OR CHARGE DIVERSION.—
(1) Establishment.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commission shall establish an interagency strike force to study how the Federal Government can most expeditiously end diversion by a State or taxing jurisdiction of 9–1–1 fees or charges. Such interagency strike force shall be known as the “Ending 9–1–1 Fee Diversion Now Strike Force” (in this section referred to as the “Strike Force”).

(2) Duties.—In carrying out the study under paragraph (1), the Strike Force shall—

(A) determine the effectiveness of any Federal laws, including regulations, policies, and practices, or budgetary or jurisdictional constraints regarding how the Federal Government can most expeditiously end diversion by a State or taxing jurisdiction of 9–1–1 fees or charges;

(B) consider whether criminal penalties would further prevent diversion by a State or taxing jurisdiction of 9–1–1 fees or charges; and

(C) determine the impacts of diversion by a State or taxing jurisdiction of 9–1–1 fees or charges.
(3) MEMBERS.—The Strike Force shall be composed of such representatives of Federal departments and agencies as the Commission considers appropriate, in addition to—

(A) State attorneys general;

(B) States or taxing jurisdictions found not to be engaging in diversion of 9–1–1 fees or charges;

(C) States or taxing jurisdictions trying to stop the diversion of 9–1–1 fees or charges;

(D) State 9–1–1 administrators;

(E) public safety organizations;

(F) groups representing the public and consumers; and

(G) groups representing public safety answering point professionals.

(4) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 270 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Strike Force shall publish on the website of the Commission and submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate a report on the findings of the study under this subsection, including—
(A) any recommendations regarding how to most expeditiously end the diversion by a State or taxing jurisdiction of 9–1–1 fees or charges, including actions that can be taken by Federal departments and agencies and appropriate changes to law or regulations; and

(B) a description of what progress, if any, relevant Federal departments and agencies have made in implementing the recommendations under subparagraph (A).

(d) FAILURE TO COMPLY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any State or taxing jurisdiction identified by the Commission in the report required under section 6(f)(2) of the Wireless Communications and Public Safety Act of 1999 (47 U.S.C. 615a–1(f)(2)) as engaging in diversion of 9–1–1 fees or charges shall be ineligible to participate or send a representative to serve on any committee, panel, or council established under section 6205(a) of the Middle Class Tax Relief and Job Creation Act of 2012 (47 U.S.C. 1425(a)) or any advisory committee established by the Commission.

DIVISION V—GROW ACT

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This division may be cited as the “Giving Retirement Options to Workers Act of 2020” or the “GROW Act”.

SEC. 102. COMPOSITE PLANS.

(a) Amendment to the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974.—

(1) In general.—Title I of the Employee Re-1001 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the

“PART 8—COMPOSITE PLANS AND LEGACY
PLANS

“SEC. 801. COMPOSITE PLAN DEFINED.

“(a) In general.—For purposes of this Act, the term ‘composite plan’ means a pension plan—
“(1) which is a multiemployer plan that is neither a defined benefit plan nor a defined contribution plan;

“(2) the terms of which provide that the plan is a composite plan for purposes of this title with respect to which not more than one multiemployer defined benefit plan is treated as a legacy plan within the meaning of section 805, unless there is more than one legacy plan following a merger of composite plans under section 806;

“(A) objectively calculated pursuant to a formula enumerated in the plan document with respect to plan participants after retirement, for life; and

“(B) in the form of life annuities, except for benefits which under section 203(e) may be immediately distributed without the consent of the participant;

“(4) for which the plan contributions for the first plan year are at least 120 percent of the normal cost for the plan year;

“(5) which requires—

“(C) corrective action through a realignment program pursuant to section 803 whenever the plan’s projected funded ratio is below 120 percent for the plan year; and

“(D) an annual notification to each participant describing the participant’s benefits under the plan and explaining that such benefits may be subject to reduction under a realignment program pursuant to section 803 based on the plan’s funded status in future plan years; and

“(6) the board of trustees of which includes at least one retiree or beneficiary in pay status during each plan year following the first plan year in which at least 5 percent of the participants in the plan are retirees or beneficiaries in pay status.

“(b) Transition From a Multiemployer Defined Benefit Plan.—
“(1) IN GENERAL.—The plan sponsor of a defined benefit plan that is a multiemployer plan may, subject to paragraph (2), amend the plan to incorporate the features of a composite plan as a component of the multiemployer plan separate from the defined benefit plan component, except in the case of a defined benefit plan for which the plan actuary has certified under section 305(b)(3) that the plan is or will be in critical status for the plan year in which such amendment would become effective or for any of the succeeding 5 plan years.

“(2) REQUIREMENTS.—Any amendment pursuant to paragraph (1) to incorporate the features of a composite plan as a component of a multiemployer plan shall—

“(A) apply with respect to all collective bargaining agreements providing for contributions to the multiemployer plan on or after the effective date of the amendment;

“(C) specify that the effective date of the amendment is—
“(i) the first day of a specified plan year following the date of the adoption of the amendment, except that the plan sponsor may alternatively provide for a separate effective date with respect to each collective bargaining agreement under which contributions to the multiemployer plan are required, which shall occur on the first day of the first plan year beginning after the termination, or if earlier, the re-opening, of each such agreement, or such earlier date as the parties to the agreement and the plan sponsor of the multiemployer plan shall agree to; and

“(D) specify that, as of the amendment’s effective date, no further benefits shall accrue under the defined benefit component of the multiemployer plan; and

“(E) specify that, as of the amendment’s effective date, the plan sponsor of the multiemployer plan shall be the plan sponsor of both the composite plan component and the defined benefit plan component of the plan.

“(3) SPECIAL RULES.—If a multiemployer plan is amended pursuant to paragraph (1)—

“(A) the requirements of this title and title IV shall be applied to the composite plan component and the defined benefit plan component of the multiemployer plan as if each such component were maintained as a separate plan; and “(B) the assets of the composite plan component and the defined benefit plan component of the plan shall be held in a single trust forming part of the plan under which the trust instrument expressly provides—

“(i) for separate accounts (and appropriate records) to be maintained to reflect the interest which each of the plan components has in the trust, including separate accounting for additions to the trust for the benefit of each plan component, disbursements made from each plan compo-nent’s account in the trust, investment experience of the trust allocable to that account, and administrative expenses (whether direct expenses or shared expenses allocated proportionally), and permits, but does not require, the pooling of some or all of the assets of the two plan components for investment purposes; and "(ii) that the assets of each of the two plan components shall be held, invested, reinvested, managed, administered and distributed for the exclusive benefit of the participants and beneficiaries of each such plan component, and in no event shall the assets of one of the plan components be available to pay benefits due under the other plan component.

"(4) NOT A TERMINATION EVENT.—Notwithstanding section 4041A, an amendment pursuant to paragraph (1) to incorporate the features of a composite plan as a component of a multiemployer plan does not constitute termination of the multiemployer plan.

"(5) NOTICE TO THE SECRETARY.—

"(A) NOTICE.—The plan sponsor of a composite plan shall provide notice to the Secretary of the intent to establish the composite plan (or, in the case of a composite plan incorporated as a component of a multiemployer plan..."
plan as described in paragraph (1), the intent to amend the multiemployer plan to incorporate such composite plan) at least 30 days prior to the effective date of such establishment or amendment.

“(B) CERTIFICATION.—In the case of a composite plan incorporated as a component of a multiemployer plan as described in paragraph (1), such notice shall include a certification by the plan actuary under section 305(b)(3) that the effective date of the amendment occurs in a plan year for which the multiemployer plan is not in critical status for that plan year and any of the succeeding 5 plan years.

“(6) REFERENCES TO COMPOSITE PLAN COMponent.—As used in this part, the term ‘composite plan’ includes a composite plan component added to a defined benefit plan pursuant to paragraph (1).

“(7) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Paragraph
(2)(A) shall not be construed as preventing the plan sponsor of a multiemployer plan from adopting an amendment pursuant to paragraph (1) because some collective bargaining agreements are amended to cease any covered employer’s obligation to contribute to the multiemployer plan before or after the plan amendment is effective. Paragraph (2)(B) shall not be construed as preventing the plan sponsor of a multiemployer plan from adopting an amendment pursuant to paragraph (1) because some participants cease to have contributions made to the multi-employer plan on their behalf before or after the plan amendment is effective.

“(c) COORDINATION WITH FUNDING RULES.—Except as otherwise provided in this title, sections 302, 304, and 305 shall not apply to a composite plan.

“(d) TREATMENT OF A COMPOSITE PLAN.—For purposes of this Act (other than sections 302 and 4245), a composite plan shall be treated as if it were a defined benefit plan unless a different treatment is provided for under applicable law.

“(a) CERTIFICATION OF FUNDED RATIOS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than the one-hundred twentieth day of each plan year of a composite plan, the plan actuary of the composite plan shall certify to the Secretary, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the plan sponsor the plan’s current funded ratio and projected funded ratio for the plan
“(2) Determination of current funded ratio and projected funded ratio.—For purposes of this section:

“(i) the value of the plan’s assets as of the first day of the plan year; to

“(B) Projected funded ratio.—The projected funded ratio is the current funded ratio projected to the first day of the fifteenth plan year following the plan year for which the determination is being made.

“(3) Consideration of contribution rate increases.—For purposes of projections under this subsection, the plan sponsor may anticipate contribution rate increases beyond the term of the current collective bargaining agreement and any agreed-to supplements, up to a maximum of 2.5 percent per year, compounded annually, unless it would be unreasonable under the circumstances to assume that contributions would increase by that amount.
“(b) Actuarial Assumptions and Methods.—

For purposes of this part:

“(1) In general.—All costs, liabilities, rates of interest and other factors under the plan shall be determined for a plan year on the basis of actuarial assumptions and methods—

“(A) each of which is reasonable (taking into account the experience of the plan and reasonable expectations);

“(B) which, in combination, offer the actuary’s best estimate of anticipated experience under the plan; and

“(C) with respect to which any change from the actuarial assumptions and methods used in the previous plan year shall be certified by the plan actuary and the actuarial rationale for such change provided in the annual report required by section 103.

“(3) Determination of Normal Cost and Plan Liabilities.—A plan’s normal cost and liabilities shall be based on the most recent actuarial valuation required under section 801(a)(5)(A) and the unit credit funding method.

“(4) TIME WHEN CERTAIN CONTRIBUTIONS
deeled made.—Any contributions for a plan year made by an employer after the last day of such plan year, but not later than two and one-half months after such day, shall be deemed to have been made on such last day. For purposes of this paragraph, such two and one-half month period may be extended for not more than six months under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

“(5) ADDITIONAL ACTUARIAL ASSUMPTIONS.— Except where otherwise provided in this part, the provisions of section 305(b)(3)(B) shall apply to any determination or projection under this part.

SEC. 803. REALIGNMENT PROGRAM.

“(a) REALIGNMENT PROGRAM.—

“(1) ADOPTION.—In any case in which the plan actuary certifies under section 802(a) that the plan’s projected funded ratio is below 120 percent for the plan year, the plan sponsor shall adopt a realignment program under paragraph (2) not later than 210 days after the due date of the certification required under such section 802(a). The plan sponsor shall adopt an updated realignment program for each succeeding plan year for which a certification

“(A) IN GENERAL.—A realignment program adopted under this paragraph is a written program which consists of all reasonable measures, including options or a range of options to be undertaken by the plan sponsor or proposed to the bargaining parties, formulated, based on reasonably anticipated experience and reasonable actuarial assumptions, to enable the plan to achieve a projected funded ratio of at least 120 percent for the following plan year.

“(B) INITIAL PROGRAM ELEMENTS.—Reasonable measures under a realignment program described in subparagraph (A) may include any of the following:

“(i) Proposed contribution increases.

“(ii) A reduction in the rate of future benefit accruals, so long as the resulting rate is not less than 1 percent of the contributions on which benefits are based as of the start of the plan year (or the equivaient standard accrual rate as described in section 305(e)(6)).

“(iv) Any other lawfully available measures not specifically described in this subparagraph or subparagraph (C) or (D) that the plan sponsor determines are reasonable.

“(C) ADDITIONAL PROGRAM ELEMENTS.—If the plan sponsor has determined that all reasonable measures available under subparagraph (B) will not enable the plan to achieve a projected funded ratio of at least 120 percent for the following plan year, such reasonable measures may also include—

“(i) a reduction of accrued benefits that are not in pay status by the date of the notice required under subsection (b)(1); or

“(ii) a reduction of any benefits of participants that are in pay status before the date of the notice required under subsection (b)(1) other than core benefits as defined in paragraph (4).
“(D) ADDITIONAL REDUCTIONS.—In the case of a composite plan for which the plan sponsor has determined that all reasonable measures available under subparagraphs (B) and (C) will not enable the plan to achieve a projected funded ratio of at least 120 percent for the following plan year, such reasonable measures may also include—

“(i) a further reduction in the rate of future benefit accruals without regard to the limitation applicable under subparagraph (B)(ii); or

“(ii) a reduction of core benefits; provided that such reductions shall be equitably distributed across the participant and beneficiary population, taking into account factors, with respect to participants and beneficiaries and their benefits, that may include one or more of the factors listed in subclauses (I) through (X) of section 305(e)(9)(D)(vi), to the extent necessary to enable the plan to achieve a projected funded ratio of at least 120 percent for the following plan year, or at the election of the plan sponsor, a projected funded ratio of at least 100 percent for the following plan year and a current funded ratio of at least 90 percent.

“(3) ADJUSTABLE BENEFIT DEFINED.—For purposes of this part, the term ‘adjustable benefit’ means—

“(A) benefits, rights, and features under the plan, including post-retirement death benefits, 60-month guarantees, disability benefits not yet in pay status, and similar benefits;

“(B) any early retirement benefit or retirement-type subsidy (within the meaning of section 204(g)(2)(A)) and any benefit payment option (other than the qualified joint and survivor annuity); and

“(C) benefit increases that were adopted (or, if later, took effect) less than 60 months before the first day such realignment program took effect.

“(4) CORE BENEFIT DEFINED.—For purposes of this part, the term ‘core benefit’ means a participant’s accrued benefit payable in the normal form of an annuity commencing at normal retirement age, determined without regard to—

“(A) any early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, or other benefits, rights, or features that may be associated with that benefit; and

“(A) In general.—A realignment program may provide that some or all of the benefit modifications described in the program will only take effect if the bargaining parties fail to agree to specified levels of increases in contributions to the plan, effective as of specified dates.

“(B) Independent benefit modifications.—If a realignment program adopts any changes to the benefit formula that are independent of potential contribution increases, such changes shall take effect not later than 180 days after the first day of the first plan year that begins following the adoption of the realignment program.

“(C) Conditional benefit modifications.—If a realignment program adopts any changes to the benefit formula that take effect only if the bargaining parties fail to agree to contribution increases, such changes shall take effect not later than the first day of the first plan year beginning after the third anniversary of the date of adoption of the realignment program.

“(D) Revocation of certain benefit modifications.—Benefit modifications described in subparagraph (C) may be revoked, in whole or in part, and retroactively or prospectively, when contributions to the plan are increased, as specified in the realignment program, including any amendments thereto. The preceding sentence shall not apply unless the contribution increases are to be effective not later than the fifth anniversary of the first day of the first plan year that begins after the adoption of the realignment program.

“(b) Notice.—

“(1) In general.—In any case in which it is certified under section 802(a) that the projected funded ratio is less than 120 percent, the plan sponsor shall, not later than 30 days after the date of the certification, provide notification of the current and projected funded ratios to the participants and beneficiaries, the bargaining parties, and the Secretary. Such notice shall include—

“(A) an explanation that contribution rate increases or benefit reductions may be necessary;

“(B) a description of the types of benefits that might be reduced; and

“(A) IN GENERAL.—No modifications may be made that reduce the rate of future benefit accrual or that reduce core benefits or adjustable benefits unless notice of such reduction has been given at least 180 days before the general effective date of such reduction for all participants and beneficiaries to—

“(ii) each employer who has an obligation to contribute to the composite plan; and
“(iii) each employee organization which, for purposes of collective bargaining, represents plan participants employed by such employers.

“(B) CONTENT OF NOTICE.—The notice under subparagraph (A) shall contain—

“(i) sufficient information to enable participants and beneficiaries to understand the effect of any reduction on their benefits, including an illustration of any affected benefit or subsidy, on an annual or monthly basis that a participant or beneficiary would otherwise have been eligible for as of the general effective date described in subparagraph (A); and

“(ii) information as to the rights and remedies of plan participants and beneficiaries as well as how to contact the Department of Labor for further information and assistance, where appropriate.

“(C) FORM AND MANNER.—Any notice under subparagraph (A)—

“(i) shall be provided in a form and manner prescribed in regulations of the Secretary of Labor;

“(3) MODEL NOTICES.—The Secretary shall—

“(A) prescribe model notices that the plan sponsor of a composite plan may use to satisfy the notice requirements under this subsection; and

“(4) DELIVERY METHOD.—Any notice under this part shall be provided in writing and may also be provided in electronic form to the extent that the form is reasonably accessible to persons to whom the notice is provided.

“SEC. 804. LIMITATION ON INCREASING BENEFITS.

“(a) LEVEL OF CURRENT FUNDED RATIOS.—Except as provided in subsections (c), (d), and (e), no plan amendment increasing benefits or establishing new benefits under a composite plan may be adopted for a plan year unless—

“(2) taking the benefit increase or new benefits into account, the current funded ratio is at least 100 percent and the projected funded ratio for the current plan year is at least 120 percent;

“(3) in any case in which, after taking the benefit increase or new benefits into account, the current funded ratio is less than 140 percent and the projected funded ratio is less than 140 percent, the benefit increase or new benefits are projected by the plan actuary to increase the present value of the plan’s liabilities for the plan year by not more than 3 percent; and

“(4) expected contributions for the current plan year are at least 120 percent of normal cost for the plan year, determined using the unit credit funding method and treating the benefit increase or new benefits as in effect for the entire plan year.

“(b) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS WHERE CORE BENEFITS REDUCED.—If a plan has been amended to reduce core benefits pursuant to a realignment program under section 803(a)(2)(D), such plan may not be subsequently amended to increase core benefits unless the amendment—

“(1) increases the level of future benefit payments only; and

“(2) provides for an equitable distribution of benefit increases across the participant and beneficiary population, taking into account the extent to which the benefits of participants were previously reduced pursuant to such realignment program.

“(d) Exception Where Maximum Deductible Limit Applies.—Subsection (a) shall not apply in connection with a plan amendment if and to the extent that contributions to the composite plan would not be deductible for the plan year under section 404(a)(1)(E) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 if the plan amendment is not adopted.

“(e) Exception For Certain Benefit Modifications.—Subsection (a) shall not apply in connection with a plan amendment under section 803(a)(5)(C), regarding conditional benefit modifications.

“(f) TREATMENT OF PLAN AMENDMENTS.—For purposes of this section—

“(1) if two or more plan amendments increasing benefits or establishing new benefits are adopted in a plan year, such amendments shall be treated as a single amendment adopted on the last day of the plan year;

“(2) all benefit increases and new benefits adopted in a single amendment are treated as a single benefit increase, irrespective of whether the increases and new benefits take effect in more than one plan year; and

“(3) increases in contributions or decreases in plan liabilities which are scheduled to take effect in future plan years may be taken into account in connection with a plan amendment if they have been agreed to in writing or otherwise formalized by the date the plan amendment is adopted.

“(a) TREATMENT AS A LEGACY PLAN.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this part and parts 2 and 3, a defined benefit plan shall be treated as a legacy plan with respect to the composite plan under which the employees who were eligible to accrue a benefit under the defined benefit plan become eligible to accrue a benefit under such composite plan.

“(3) ELIGIBLE TO ACCRUE A BENEFIT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), an employee is considered eligible to accrue a benefit under a composite plan as of the first day in which the employee completes an hour of service under a collective bargaining agreement that provides for contributions to and accruals under the composite plan in lieu of accruals under the legacy plan.

“(4) COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENT.—As used in this part, the term ‘collective bargaining agreement’ includes any agreement under which an employer has an obligation to contribute to a plan.
(5) OTHER TERMS.—Any term used in this part which is not defined in this part and which is also used in section 305 shall have the same meaning provided such term in such section.

(b) RESTRICTIONS ON ACCEPTANCE BY COMPOSITE PLAN OF AGREEMENTS AND CONTRIBUTIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The plan sponsor of a composite plan shall not accept or recognize a collective bargaining agreement (or any modification to such agreement), and no contributions may be accepted and no benefits may be accrued or otherwise earned under the agreement—

(A) in any case in which the plan actuary of any defined benefit plan that would be treated as a legacy plan with respect to such composite plan has certified under section 305(b)(3) that such defined benefit plan is or will be in critical status for the plan year in which such agreement would take effect or for any of the succeeding 5 plan years; and

(B) unless the agreement requires each employer who is a party to such agreement, including employers whose employees are not participants in the legacy plan, to provide contributions to the legacy plan with respect to such
composite plan in a manner that satisfies the transition contribution requirements of subsection (d).

“(2) NOTICE.—Not later than 30 days after a determination by a plan sponsor of a composite plan that an agreement fails to satisfy the requirements described in paragraph (1), the plan sponsor shall provide notification of such failure and the reasons for such determination—

“(A) to the parties to the agreement;

“(B) to active participants of the composite plan who have ceased to accrue or otherwise earn benefits with respect to service with an employer pursuant to paragraph (1); and

“(C) to the Secretary, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

“(3) LIMITATION ON RETROACTIVE EFFECT.— This subsection shall not apply to benefits accrued before the date on which notice is provided under paragraph (2).

“(c) RESTRICTION ON ACCRUAL OF BENEFITS UNDER A COMPOSITE PLAN.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—In any case in which an employer, under a collective bargaining agreement
entered into after the date of enactment of the Giving Retirement Options to Workers Act of 2020, ceases to have an obligation to contribute to a multi-employer defined benefit plan, no employees employed by the employer may accrue or otherwise earn benefits under any composite plan, with respect to service with that employer, for a 60-month period beginning on the date on which the employer entered into such collective bargaining agreement.

Within 30 days of determining that an employer has ceased to have an obligation to contribute to a legacy plan with respect to employees employed by an employer that is or will be contributing to a composite plan with respect to service of such employees, the plan sponsor of the legacy plan shall notify the plan sponsor of the composite plan of that cessation.

Not later than 30 days after determining that an employer has ceased to have an obligation to contribute to a legacy plan, the plan sponsor of the composite plan shall notify the bargaining parties, the active participants affected by the cessation of accruals, the Secretary, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation of the cessation of accruals, the period during which such cessation is in effect, and the reasons therefor.

“(4) LIMITATION ON RETROACTIVE EFFECT.—
This subsection shall not apply to benefits accrued before the date on which notice is provided under paragraph (3).

“(d) TRANSITION CONTRIBUTION REQUIREMENTS.—
“(1) IN GENERAL.—A collective bargaining agreement satisfies the transition contribution requirements of this subsection if the agreement—

“(A) authorizes payment of contributions to a legacy plan at a rate or rates equal to or greater than the transition contribution rate es-established by the legacy plan under paragraph (2); and

“(B) does not provide for—

“(i) a suspension of contributions to the legacy plan with respect to any period
of service; or

“(ii) any new direct or indirect exclusion of younger or newly hired employees
of the employer from being taken into account in determining contributions owed to the legacy plan.

“(2) TRANSITION CONTRIBUTION RATE.—
“(A) IN GENERAL.—The transition contribution rate for a plan year is the contribution rate that, as certified by the actuary of the legacy plan in accordance with the principles in section 305(b)(3)(B), is reasonably expected to be adequate—

“(ii) to amortize the plan’s unfunded liabilities in level annual installments over 25 years, beginning with the plan year in which the transition contribution rate is first established; and

“(iii) to amortize any subsequent changes in the legacy plan’s unfunded liability due to experience gains or losses (including investment gains or losses, gains or losses due to contributions greater or less than the contributions made under the prior transition contribution rate, and other actuarial gains or losses), changes in actuarial assumptions, changes to the legacy plan’s benefits, or changes in funding method over a period of 15 plan years beginning with the plan year in which such change in unfunded liability is incurred.

The transition contribution rate for any plan year may not be less than the transition contribution rate for the plan year in which such rate is first established.

“(B) MULTIPLE RATES.—If different rates of contribution are payable to the legacy plan by different employers or for different classes of employees, the certification shall specify a transition contribution rate for each such employer.

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided by clause (ii), the transition contribution rate applicable to an employer for a plan year is the rate in effect for the plan year of the legacy plan that commences on or after 180 days before the earlier of—

“(I) the effective date of the collective bargaining agreement pursuant to which the employer contributes to the legacy plan; or

“(II) 5 years after the last plan year for which the transition contribution rate applicable to the employer
was established or updated.

“(ii) Exception.—The transition contribution rate applicable to an employer for the first plan year beginning on or after the commencement of the employer’s obligation to contribute to the composite
plan is the rate in effect for the plan year
of the legacy plan that commences on or after 180 days before such first plan year.

“(D) Effect of legacy plan financial circumstances.—If the plan actuary of the legacy plan has certified under section 305 that the plan is in endangered or critical status for a plan year, the transition contribution rate for the following plan year is the rate determined with respect to the employer under the legacy
plan’s funding improvement or rehabilitation plan under section 305, if greater than the rate otherwise determined, but in no event greater than 75 percent of the sum of the contribution
rates applicable to the legacy plan and the composite plan for the plan year.

“(E) Other actuarial assumptions
and methods.—Except as provided in sub-paragraph (A), the determination of the transition contribution rate for a plan year shall be based on actuarial assumptions and methods consistent with the minimum funding determinations made under section 304 (or, if applicable, section 305) with respect to the legacy plan for the plan year.

“(F) ADJUSTMENTS IN RATE.—The plan sponsor of a legacy plan from time to time may adjust the transition contribution rate or rates applicable to an employer under this paragraph by increasing some rates and decreasing others if the actuary certifies that such adjusted rates in combination will produce projected contribution income for the plan year beginning on or after the date of certification that is not less than would be produced by the transition contribution rates in effect at the time of the certification.

“(G) NOTICE OF TRANSITION CONTRIBUTION RATE.—The plan sponsor of a legacy plan shall provide notice to the parties to collective bargaining agreements pursuant to which contributions are made to the legacy plan of changes to the transition contribution rate requirements at least 30 days before the beginning of the plan year for which the rate is effective.

“(H) NOTICE TO COMPOSITE PLAN SPONSOR.—Not later than 30 days after a determination by the plan sponsor of a legacy plan that a collective bargaining agreement provides for a rate of contributions that is below the transition contribution rate applicable to one or more employers that are parties to the collective bargaining agreement, the plan sponsor of the legacy plan shall notify the plan sponsor of any composite plan under which employees of such employer would otherwise be eligible to accrue a benefit.

“(3) CORRECTION PROCEDURES.—Pursuant to standards prescribed by the Secretary, the plan sponsor of a composite plan shall adopt rules and procedures that give the parties to the collective bargaining agreement notice of the failure of such agreement to satisfy the transition contribution requirements of this subsection, and a reasonable opportunity to correct such failure, not to exceed 180 days from the date of notice given under subsection (b)(2).
“(4) Supplemental Contributions.—A collective bargaining agreement may provide for supplemental contributions to the legacy plan for a plan year in excess of the transition contribution rate determined under paragraph (2), regardless of whether the legacy plan is in endangered or critical status for such plan year.

“(e) Nonapplication of Composite Plan Restrictions.—

“(1) In General.—The provisions of subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall not apply with respect to a collective bargaining agreement, to the extent the agreement, or a predecessor agreement, provides or provided for contributions to a defined benefit plan that is a legacy plan, as of the first day of the first plan year following a plan year for which the plan actuary certifies that the plan is fully funded, has been fully funded for at least three out of the immediately preceding 5 plan years, and is projected to remain fully funded for at least the following 4 plan years.

the present value of the plan’s liabilities, determined in accordance with the rules prescribed by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation under sections 4219(c)(1)(D) and 4281 for multiemployer plans terminating by mass withdrawal, as in effect for the date of the determination, except the plan’s reasonable assumption regarding the starting date of bene-

“(3) OTHER APPLICABLE RULES.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), actuarial determinations and projections under this section shall be based on the rules in section 305(b)(3) and section 802(b).

“SEC. 806. MERGERS AND ASSET TRANSFERS OF COM-POSITIVE PLANS.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—Assets and liabilities of a composite plan may only be merged with, or transferred to,
another plan if—

“(1) the other plan is a composite plan;

“(2) the plan or plans resulting from the merger or transfer is a composite plan;

able benefit is lower immediately after the transaction than it was immediately before the transaction; and
“(4) the value of the assets transferred in the case of a transfer reasonably reflects the value of the amounts contributed with respect to the participants whose benefits are being transferred, adjusted for allocable distributions, investment gains and losses, and administrative expenses.

“(b) Legacy Plan.—

“(1) In General.—After a merger or transfer involving a composite plan, the legacy plan with respect to an employer that is obligated to contribute to the resulting composite plan is the legacy plan that applied to that employer immediately before the merger or transfer.

“(2) Multiple Legacy Plans.—If an employer is obligated to contribute to more than one legacy plan with respect to employees eligible to accrue benefits under more than one composite plan and there is a merger or transfer of such legacy plans, the transition contribution rate applicable to the legacy plan resulting from the merger or transfer with respect to that employer shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of section 805(d)(2)(B).”.

(2) Penalties.—
(A) Civil enforcement of failure to comply with realignment program.—Section 502(a) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1132(a)) is amended—

(i) in paragraph (10), by striking “or” at the end;

(ii) in paragraph (11), by striking the period at the end and inserting “; or”; and

(iii) by adding at the end the following:

“(12) in the case of a composite plan required to adopt a realignment program under section 803, if the plan sponsor—

“(A) has not adopted a realignment program under that section by the deadline established in such section; or

“(B) fails to update or comply with the terms of the realignment program in accordance with the requirements of such section, by the Secretary, by an employer that has an obligation to contribute with respect to the composite plan, or by an employee organization that represents active participants in the composite plan, for an order compelling the plan sponsor to adopt a realignment program, or to update or comply with the terms of the realignment program, in accordance with the requirements of such section and the realignment program.”.

(B) Civil Penalties.—Section 502(c) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1132(c)) is amended—

(i) by moving paragraphs (8), (10), and (12) each 2 ems to the left;

(ii) by redesignating paragraphs (9) through (12) as paragraphs (12) through (15), respectively; and

(iii) by inserting after paragraph (8) the following:

“(9) The Secretary may assess against any plan sponsor of a composite plan a civil penalty of not more than $1,100 per day for each violation by such sponsor—

“(A) of the requirement under section 802(a) on the plan actuary to certify the plan’s current or projected funded ratio by the date specified in such subsection; or

“(B) of the requirement under section 803 to adopt a realignment program by the deadline established in that section and to comply with its terms.
“(10)(A) The Secretary may assess against any plan sponsor of a composite plan a civil penalty of not more than $100 per day for each violation by such sponsor of the requirement under section 803(b) to provide notice as described in such section, except that no penalty may be assessed in any case in which the plan sponsor exercised reasonable diligence to meet the requirements of such section and—

“(i) the plan sponsor did not know that the violation existed; or “(ii) the plan sponsor provided such notice during the 30-day period beginning on the first date on which the plan sponsor knew, or in exercising reasonable due diligence should have known, that such violation existed.

“(B) In any case in which the plan sponsor exercised reasonable diligence to meet the requirements of section 803(b)—

“(i) the total penalty assessed under this paragraph against such sponsor for a plan year may not exceed $500,000; and

“(ii) the Secretary may waive part or all of such penalty to the extent that the payment of such penalty would be excessive or otherwise inequitable relative to the violation involved.

“(11) The Secretary may assess against any plan sponsor of a composite plan a civil penalty of not more than $100 per day for each violation by such sponsor of the notice requirements under sections 801(b)(5) and 805(b)(2).”.

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents in section 1 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1001 note) is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 734 the following:

“PART 8—COMPOSITE PLANS AND LEGACY PLANS

Sec. 801. Composite plan defined.
Sec. 802. Funded ratios; actuarial assumptions.
Sec. 803. Realignment program.
Sec. 804. Limitation on increasing benefits.
Sec. 805. Composite plan restrictions to preserve legacy plan funding.
Sec. 806. Mergers and asset transfers of composite plans.”.

(b) AMENDMENT TO THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Part III of subchapter D of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end the following:

“Subpart C—Composite Plans and Legacy Plans

Sec. 437. Composite plan defined.
Sec. 438. Funded ratios; actuarial assumptions.
Sec. 439. Realignment program.
Sec. 440. Limitation on increasing benefits.
Sec. 440A. Composite plan restrictions to preserve legacy plan funding.
Sec. 440B. Mergers and asset transfers of composite plans.”.
“SEC. 437. COMPOSITE PLAN DEFINED.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this title, the term ‘composite plan’ means a pension plan—

“(1) which is a multiemployer plan that is neither a defined benefit plan nor a defined contribution plan,

“(2) the terms of which provide that the plan is a composite plan for purposes of this title with respect to which not more than one multiemployer defined benefit plan is treated as a legacy plan within the meaning of section 440A, unless there is more than one legacy plan following a merger of composite plans under section 440B,

“(3) which provides systematically for the payment of benefits—

“(A) objectively calculated pursuant to a formula enumerated in the plan document with respect to plan participants after retirement, for life, and

“(B) in the form of life annuities, except for benefits which under section 411(a)(11) may be immediately distributed without the consent of the participant,

“(4) for which the plan contributions for the first plan year are at least 120 percent of the normal cost for the plan year,
“(5) which requires—

“(C) corrective action through a realignment program pursuant to section 439 whenever the plan’s projected funded ratio is below 120 percent for the plan year, and

“(D) an annual notification to each participant describing the participant’s benefits under the plan and explaining that such benefits may be subject to reduction under a realignment program pursuant to section 439 based on the plan’s funded status in future plan years, and

“(6) the board of trustees of which includes at least one retiree or beneficiary in pay status during each plan year following the first plan year in which at least 5 percent of the participants in the plan are retirees or beneficiaries in pay status.

“(b) Transition From a Multiemployer Defined Benefit Plan.—
“(1) IN GENERAL.—The plan sponsor of a defined benefit plan that is a multiemployer plan may, subject to paragraph (2), amend the plan to incorporate the features of a composite plan as a component of the multiemployer plan separate from the defined benefit plan component, except in the case of a defined benefit plan for which the plan actuary has certified under section 432(b)(3) that the plan is or will be in critical status for the plan year in which such amendment would become effective or for any of the succeeding 5 plan years.

“(2) REQUIREMENTS.—Any amendment pursuant to paragraph (1) to incorporate the features of a composite plan as a component of a multiemployer plan shall—

“(A) apply with respect to all collective bargaining agreements providing for contributions to the multiemployer plan on or after the effective date of the amendment,

“(C) specify that the effective date of the amendment is—
“(i) the first day of a specified plan year following the date of the adoption of the amendment, except that the plan sponsor may alternatively provide for a separate effective date with respect to each collective bargaining agreement under which contributions to the multiemployer plan are required, which shall occur on the first day of the first plan year beginning after the termination, or if earlier, the re-opening, of each such agreement, or such earlier date as the parties to the agreement and the plan sponsor of the multiemployer plan shall agree to, and

“(D) specify that, as of the amendment’s effective date, no further benefits shall accrue under the defined benefit component of the multiemployer plan, and

“(E) specify that, as of the amendment’s effective date, the plan sponsor of the multiemployer plan shall be the plan sponsor of both the composite plan component and the defined benefit plan component of the plan.

“(3) SPECIAL RULES.—If a multiemployer plan is amended pursuant to paragraph (1)—

“(A) the requirements of this title shall be applied to the composite plan component and the defined benefit plan component of the multiemployer plan as if each such component were maintained as a separate plan, and

“(B) the assets of the composite plan component and the defined benefit plan component of the plan shall be held in a single trust forming part of the plan under which the trust instrument expressly provides—

“(i) for separate accounts (and appropriate records) to be maintained to reflect the interest which each of the plan components has in the trust, including separate accounting for additions to the trust for the benefit of each plan component, disbursements made from each plan component’s account in the trust, investment experience of the trust allocable to that account, and administrative expenses (whether direct expenses or shared expenses allocated proportionally), and permits, but does not require, the pooling of some or all of the assets of the two plan components for investment purposes, and

“(ii) that the assets of each of the two plan components shall be held, invested, reinvested, managed, administered and distributed for the exclusive benefit of the participants and beneficiaries of each such plan component, and in no event shall the assets of one of the plan components be available to pay benefits due under the other plan component.

“(4) NOT A TERMINATION EVENT.—Notwithstanding section 4041A of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, an amendment pursuant to paragraph (1) to incorporate the features of a composite plan as a component of a multiemployer plan does not constitute termination of the multiemployer plan.

“(A) NOTICE.—The plan sponsor of a composite plan shall provide notice to the Secretary of the intent to establish the composite plan (or, in the case of a composite plan incorporated as a component of a multiemployer plan as described in paragraph (1), the intent to amend the multiemployer plan to incorporate such composite plan) at least 30 days prior to the effective date of such establishment or amendment.

“(B) CERTIFICATION.—In the case of a composite plan incorporated as a component of a multiemployer plan as described in paragraph (1), such notice shall include a certification by the plan actuary under section 432(b)(3) that the effective date of the amendment occurs in a plan year for which the multiemployer plan is not in critical status for that plan year and any of the succeeding 5 plan years.

“(6) REFERENCES TO COMPOSITE PLAN COMPONENT.—As used in this subpart, the term ‘composite plan’ includes a composite plan component added to a defined benefit plan pursuant to paragraph (1).

“(7) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Paragraph (2)(A) shall not be construed as preventing the plan sponsor of a multiemployer plan from adopting an amendment pursuant to paragraph (1) because some collective bargaining agreements are amended to cease any covered employer’s obligation to contribute to the multiemployer plan before or after the plan amendment is effective. Paragraph (2)(B) shall not be construed as preventing the plan sponsor of a multiemployer plan from adopting an amendment pursuant to paragraph (1) because some participants cease to have contributions made to the multiemployer plan on their behalf before or after the plan amendment is effective.

“(c) Coordination With Funding Rules.—Except as otherwise provided in this title, sections 412, 431, and 432 shall not apply to a composite plan.

“(d) Treatment of a Composite Plan.—For purposes of this title (other than sections 412 and 418E), a composite plan shall be treated as if it were a defined benefit plan unless a different treatment is provided for under applicable law.

“(a) Certification of Funded Ratios.—

“(1) In general.—Not later than the one-hundred twentieth day of each plan year of a composite plan, the plan actuary of the composite plan shall certify to the Secretary, the Secretary of Labor, and the plan sponsor the plan’s current funded ratio and projected funded ratio for the plan year.

“(2) Determination of current funded ratio and projected funded ratio.—For purposes of this section—

“(i) the value of the plan’s assets as of the first day of the plan year, to

“(B) Projected funded ratio.—The projected funded ratio is the current funded ratio projected to the first day of the fifteenth plan year following the plan year for which the determination is being made.

“(3) Consideration of contribution rate increases.—For purposes of projections under this subsection, the plan sponsor may anticipate contribution rate increases beyond the term of the current collective bargaining agreement and any agreed-to supplements, up to a maximum of 2.5 percent per year, compounded annually, unless it would be unreasonable under the circumstances to assume that contributions would increase by that amount.

“(b) Actuarial Assumptions and Methods.—

For purposes of this part—

“(1) In general.—All costs, liabilities, rates of interest, and other factors under the plan shall be determined for a plan year on the basis of actuarial assumptions and methods—

“(A) each of which is reasonable (taking into account the experience of the plan and reasonable expectations),

“(3) Determination of Normal Cost and Plan Liabilities.—A plan’s normal cost and liabilities shall be based on the most recent actuarial valuation required under section 437(a)(5)(A) and the unit credit funding method.

“(4) Time when certain contributions deemed made.—Any contributions for a plan year made by an employer after the last day of such plan year, but not later than two and one-half months after such day, shall be deemed to have been made on such last day. For purposes of this paragraph, such two and one-half month period may be extended for not more than six months under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

“(5) Additional actuarial assumptions.—Except where otherwise provided in this subpart, the provisions of section 432(b)(3)(B) shall apply to any determination or projection under this subpart.

“(a) Realignment Program.—

“(1) Adoption.—In any case in which the plan actuary certifies under section 438(a) that the plan’s projected funded ratio is below 120 percent for the plan year, the plan sponsor shall adopt a realignment program under paragraph (2) not later than 210 days after the due date of the certification required under section 438(a). The plan sponsor shall adopt an updated realignment program for each succeeding plan year for which a certification described in the preceding sentence is made.

“(2) CONTENT OF REALIGNMENT PROGRAM.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—A realignment program adopted under this paragraph is a written program which consists of all reasonable measures, including options or a range of options to be undertaken by the plan sponsor or proposed to the bargaining parties, formulated, based on reasonably anticipated experience and reasonable actuarial assumptions, to enable the plan to achieve a projected funded ratio of at least 120 percent for the following plan year.

“(B) INITIAL PROGRAM ELEMENTS.—Reasonable measures under a realignment program described in subparagraph (A) may include any of the following:

“(i) Proposed contribution increases.

“(ii) A reduction in the rate of future benefit accruals, so long as the resulting rate shall not be less than 1 percent of the contributions on which benefits are based as of the start of the plan year (or the equivalent standard accrual rate as described in section 432(e)(6)).

“(iv) Any other legally available measures not specifically described in this subparagraph or subparagraph (C) or (D) that the plan sponsor determines are reasonable.

“(C) ADDITIONAL PROGRAM ELEMENTS.—

If the plan sponsor has determined that all reasonable measures available under subparagraph (B) will not enable the plan to achieve a projected funded ratio of at least 120 percent the following plan year, such reasonable measures may also include—

section (b)(1) other than core benefits as defined in paragraph (4).

“(D) ADDITIONAL REDUCTIONS.—In the case of a composite plan for which the plan sponsor has determined that all reasonable measures available under subparagraphs (B) and (C) will not enable the plan to achieve a projected funded ratio of at least 120 percent for the following plan year, such reasonable measures may also include—

“(ii) a reduction of core benefits, provided that such reductions shall be equitably distributed across the participant and beneficiary population, taking into account factors, with respect to participants and beneficiaries and their benefits, that may include one or more of the factors listed in subclauses (I) through (X) of section 432(e)(9)(D)(vi), to the extent necessary to enable the plan to achieve a projected funded ratio of at least 120 percent for the following plan year, or at the election of the plan sponsor, a projected funded ratio of at least 100 percent for the following plan year and a current funded ratio of at least 90 percent.

“(3) ADJUSTABLE BENEFIT DEFINED.—For purposes of this subpart, the term ‘adjustable benefit’ means—

“(A) benefits, rights, and features under the plan, including post-retirement death benefits, 60-month guarantees, disability benefits not yet in pay status, and similar benefits,

“(B) any early retirement benefit or retirement-type subsidy (within the meaning of section 411(d)(6)(B)(i)) and any benefit payment option (other than the qualified joint and survivor annuity), and

“(C) benefit increases that were adopted (or, if later, took effect) less than 60 months before the first day such realignment program took effect.

“(4) CORE BENEFIT DEFINED.—For purposes of this subpart, the term ‘core benefit’ means a participant’s accrued benefit payable in the normal form of an annuity commencing at normal retirement age, determined without regard to—
“(A) any early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, or other benefits, rights, or features that may be associated with that benefit, and

“(B) any cost-of-living adjustments or benefit increases effective after the date of retirement.

“(A) IN GENERAL.—A realignment program may provide that some or all of the benefit modifications described in the program will only take effect if the bargaining parties fail to agree to specified levels of increases in contributions to the plan, effective as of specified dates.

“(B) INDEPENDENT BENEFIT MODIFICATIONS.—If a realignment program adopts any changes to the benefit formula that are independent of potential contribution increases, such changes shall take effect not later than 180 days following the first day of the first plan year that begins following the adoption of the realignment program.

“(C) CONDITIONAL BENEFIT MODIFICATIONS.—If a realignment program adopts any changes to the benefit formula that take effect only if the bargaining parties fail to agree to contribution increases, such changes shall take effect not later than the first day of the first plan year beginning after the third anniversary of the date of adoption of the realignment program.

“(D) Revocation of Certain Benefit Modifications.—Benefit modifications described in paragraph (3) may be revoked, in whole or in part, and retroactively or prospectively, when contributions to the plan are increased, as specified in the realignment program, including any amendments thereto. The preceding sentence shall not apply unless the contribution increases are to be effective not later than the fifth anniversary of the first day of the first plan year that begins after the adoption of the realignment program.

“(b) Notice.—

“(1) In general.—In any case in which it is certified under section 438(a) that the projected funded ratio is less than 120 percent, the plan sponsor shall, not later than 30 days after the date of the certification, provide notification of the current and projected funded ratios to the participants and beneficiaries, the bargaining parties, and the Secretary. Such notice shall include—

“(A) an explanation that contribution rate increases or benefit reductions may be necessary,

“(B) a description of the types of benefits that might be reduced, and

“(A) IN GENERAL.—No modifications may be made that reduce the rate of future benefit accrual or that reduce core benefits or adjustable benefits unless notice of such reduction has been given at least 180 days before the general effective date of such reduction for all participants and beneficiaries to—

“(ii) each employer who has an obligation to contribute to the composite plan, and
“(iii) each employee organization which, for purposes of collective bargaining, represents plan participants employed by such employers.

“(i) sufficient information to enable participants and beneficiaries to understand the effect of any reduction on their benefits, including an illustration of any affected benefit or subsidy, on an annual or monthly basis that a participant or beneficiary would otherwise have been eligible for as of the general effective date described in subparagraph (A), and

“(ii) information as to the rights and remedies of plan participants and beneficiaries as well as how to contact the Department of Labor for further information and assistance, where appropriate.

“(C) FORM AND MANNER.—Any notice under subparagraph (A)—

“(i) shall be provided in a form and manner prescribed in regulations of the Secretary of Labor,

“(A) prescribe model notices that the plan sponsor of a composite plan may use to satisfy the notice requirements under this subsection, and

“(4) DELIVERY METHOD.—Any notice under this part shall be provided in writing and may also be provided in electronic form to the extent that the form is reasonably accessible to persons to whom the notice is provided.

“SEC. 440. LIMITATION ON INCREASING BENEFITS.

“(a) LEVEL OF CURRENT FUNDED RATIOS.—Except as provided in subsections (c), (d), and (e), no plan amendment increasing benefits or establishing new benefits under a composite plan may be adopted for a plan year unless—

“(2) taking the benefit increase or new benefits into account, the current funded ratio is at least 100 percent and the projected funded ratio for the current plan year is at least 120 percent,

“(3) in any case in which, after taking the benefit increase or new benefits into account, the current funded ratio is less than 140 percent or the projected funded ratio is less than 140 percent, the benefit increase or new benefits are projected by the plan actuary to increase the present value of the plan’s liabilities for the plan year by not more than 3 percent, and

“(4) expected contributions for the current plan year are at least 120 percent of normal cost for the plan year, determined using the unit credit funding method and treating the benefit increase or new benefits as in effect for the entire plan year.

quently amended to increase core benefits unless the amendment—

“(1) increases the level of future benefit payments only, and

“(2) provides for an equitable distribution of benefit increases across the participant and beneficiary population, taking into account the extent to which the benefits of participants were previously reduced pursuant to such realignment program.

“(2) all benefit increases and new benefits adopted in a single amendment are treated as a single benefit increase, irrespective of whether the increases and new benefits take effect in more than one plan year, and

“(3) increases in contributions or decreases in plan liabilities which are scheduled to take effect in future plan years may be taken into account in connection with a plan amendment if they have been agreed to in writing or otherwise formalized by the date the plan amendment is adopted.

“(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this subchapter, a defined benefit plan shall be treated as a legacy plan with respect to the composite plan under which the employees who were eligible to accrue a benefit under the defined benefit plan become eligible to accrue a benefit under such composite plan.

“(3) ELIGIBLE TO ACCRUE A BENEFIT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), an employee is considered eligible to accrue a benefit under a composite plan as of the first day in which the employee completes an hour of service under a collective bargaining agreement that provides for contributions to and accruals under the composite plan in lieu of accruals under the legacy plan.

“(4) COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENT.—As used in this subpart, the term ‘collective bargaining agreement’ includes any agreement under which an employer has an obligation to contribute to a plan.
“(5) OTHER TERMS.—Any term used in this subpart which is not defined in this part and which is also used in section 432 shall have the same meaning provided such term in such section.

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The plan sponsor of a composite plan shall not accept or recognize a collective bargaining agreement (or any modification to such agreement), and no contributions may be accepted and no benefits may be accrued or otherwise earned under the agreement—

“(A) in any case in which the plan actuary of any defined benefit plan that would be treated as a legacy plan with respect to such composite plan has certified under section 432(b)(3) that such defined benefit plan is or will be in critical status for the plan year in which such agreement would take effect or for any of the succeeding 5 plan years, and

composite plan in a manner that satisfies the transition contribution requirements of subsection (d).

“(2) NOTICE.—Not later than 30 days after a determination by a plan sponsor of a composite plan that an agreement fails to satisfy the requirements described in paragraph (1), the plan sponsor shall provide notification of such failure and the reasons for such determination to—

“(A) the parties to the agreement,

“(B) active participants of the composite plan who have ceased to accrue or otherwise earn benefits with respect to service with an employer pursuant to paragraph (1), and

“(C) the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

“(3) LIMITATION ON RETROACTIVE EFFECT.—This subsection shall not apply to benefits accrued before the date on which notice is provided under paragraph (2).

“(1) IN GENERAL.—In any case in which an employer, under a collective bargaining agreement
entered into after the date of enactment of the Giving Retirement Options to Workers Act of 2020, ceases to have an obligation to contribute to a multi-employer defined benefit plan, no employees employed by the employer may accrue or otherwise earn benefits under any composite plan, with respect to service with that employer, for a 60-month period beginning on the date on which the employer entered into such collective bargaining agreement.

Within 30 days of determining that an employer has ceased to have an obligation to contribute to a legacy plan with respect to employees employed by an employer that is or will be contributing to a composite plan with respect to service of such employees, the plan sponsor of the legacy plan shall notify the plan sponsor of the composite plan of that cessation.

Not later than 30 days after determining that an employer has ceased to have an obligation to contribute to a legacy plan, the plan sponsor of the composite plan shall notify the bargaining parties, the active participants affected by the cessation of accruals, the Secretary, the Secretary of Labor, and the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation of the cessation of accruals, the period during which such cessation is in effect, and the reasons therefor.

This subsection shall not apply to benefits accrued
before the date on which notice is provided under paragraph (3).

“(d) TRANSITION CONTRIBUTION REQUIREMENTS.—
“(1) IN GENERAL.—A collective bargaining agreement satisfies the transition contribution requirements of this subsection if the agreement—

“(A) authorizes for payment of contributions to a legacy plan at a rate or rates equal to or greater than the transition contribution rate established under paragraph (2), and

“(B) does not provide for—

“(i) a suspension of contributions to
the legacy plan with respect to any period
of service, or

“(ii) any new direct or indirect exclusion of younger or newly hired employees
of the employer from being taken into account in determining contributions owed to
the legacy plan.

“(2) TRANSITION CONTRIBUTION RATE.—
"(A) In general.—The transition contribution rate for a plan year is the contribution rate that, as certified by the actuary of the legacy plan in accordance with the principles in section 432(b)(3)(B), is reasonably expected to be adequate—

"(i) to fund the normal cost for the plan year,

"(ii) to amortize the plan’s unfunded liabilities in level annual installments over 25 years, beginning with the plan year in which the transition contribution rate is first established, and

"(iii) to amortize any subsequent changes in the legacy plan’s unfunded liability due to experience gains or losses (including investment gains or losses, gains or losses due to contributions greater or less than the contributions made under the prior transition contribution rate, and other actuarial gains or losses), changes in actuarial assumptions, changes to the legacy plan’s benefits, or changes in funding method over a period of 15 plan years beginning with the plan year in which such change in unfunded liability is incurred.

The transition contribution rate for any plan year may not be less than the transition contribution rate for the plan year in which such rate is first established.

“(B) MULTIPLE RATES.—If different rates of contribution are payable to the legacy plan by different employers or for different classes of employees, the certification shall specify a transition contribution rate for each such employer.

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided by clause (ii), the transition contribution rate applicable to an employer for a plan year is the rate in effect for the plan year of the legacy plan that commences on or after 180 days before the earlier of—

tion rate applicable to the employer
was established or updated.

“(ii) EXCEPTION.—The transition collection rate applicable to an employer for the first plan year beginning on or after the commencement of the employer’s obligation to contribute to the composite
plan is the rate in effect for the plan year
of the legacy plan that commences on or after 180 days before such first plan year.

“(D) EFFECT OF LEGACY PLAN FINANCIAL CIRCUMSTANCES.—If the plan actuary of the legacy plan has certified under section 432 that
the plan is in endangered or critical status for a plan year, the transition collection rate for the following plan year is the rate determined
with respect to the employer under the legacy
plan’s funding improvement or rehabilitation
plan under section 432, if greater than the rate
otherwise determined, but in no event greater than 75 percent of the sum of the contribution
rates applicable to the legacy plan and the composite plan for the plan year.

“(E) OTHER ACTUARIAL ASSUMPTIONS
AND METHODS.—Except as provided in sub-
paragraph (A), the determination of the transition contribution rate for a plan year shall be based on actuarial assumptions and methods consistent with the minimum funding determinations made under section 431 (or, if applicable, section 432) with respect to the legacy plan for the plan year.

“(F) Adjustments in rate.—The plan sponsor of a legacy plan from time to time may adjust the transition contribution rate or rates applicable to an employer under this paragraph by increasing some rates and decreasing others if the actuary certifies that such adjusted rates in combination will produce projected contribution income for the plan year beginning on or after the date of certification that is not less than would be produced by the transition contribution rates in effect at the time of the certification.

“(G) Notice of transition contribution rate.—The plan sponsor of a legacy plan shall provide notice to the parties to collective bargaining agreements pursuant to which contributions are made to the legacy plan of changes to the transition contribution rate requirements at least 30 days before the beginning of the plan year for which the rate is effective.

“(H) NOTICE TO COMPOSITE PLAN SPONsor.—Not later than 30 days after a determination by the plan sponsor of a legacy plan that a collective bargaining agreement provides for a rate of contributions that is below the transition contribution rate applicable to one or more employers that are parties to the collective bargaining agreement, the plan sponsor of the legacy plan shall notify the plan sponsor of any composite plan under which employees of such employer would otherwise be eligible to accrue a benefit.

“(3) CORRECTION PROCEDURES.—Pursuant to standards prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, the plan sponsor of a composite plan shall adopt rules and procedures that give the parties to the collective bargaining agreement notice of the failure of such agreement to satisfy the transition contribution requirements of this subsection, and a reasonable opportunity to correct such failure, not to exceed 180 days from the date of notice given under subsection (b)(2).
“(4) Supplemental contributions.—A collective bargaining agreement may provide for supplemental contributions to the legacy plan for a plan year in excess of the transition contribution rate determined under paragraph (2), regardless of whether the legacy plan is in endangered or critical status for such plan year.

“(e) Nonapplication of Composite Plan Restrictions.—

“(1) In general.—The provisions of subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall not apply with respect to a collective bargaining agreement, to the extent the agreement, or a predecessor agreement, provides or provided for contributions to a defined benefit plan that is a legacy plan, as of the first day of the first plan year following a plan year for which the plan actuary certifies that the plan is fully funded, has been fully funded for at least three out of the immediately preceding 5 plan years, and is projected to remain fully funded for at least the following 4 plan years.

the present value of the plan’s liabilities, determined
in accordance with the rules prescribed by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation under sections
4219(c)(1)(D) and 4281 of Employee Retirement Income and Security Act for multiemployer plans terminating by mass withdrawal, as in effect for the date of the determination, except the plan’s reasonable assumption regarding the starting date of benefits may be used.

“(3) Other applicable rules.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), actuarial determinations
and projections under this section shall be based on

“SEC. 440B. MERGERS AND ASSET TRANSFERS OF COM-

another plan if—

“(2) the plan or plans resulting from the merg-

“(3) no participant’s accrued benefit or adjustable benefit is lower immediately after the transaction than it was immediately before the transaction, and “(4) the value of the assets transferred in the case of a transfer reasonably reflects the value of the amounts contributed with respect to the participants whose benefits are being transferred, adjusted for allocable distributions, investment gains and losses, and administrative expenses.

“(b) LEGACY PLAN.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—After a merger or transfer involving a composite plan, the legacy plan with respect to an employer that is obligated to contribute to the resulting composite plan is the legacy plan that applied to that employer immediately before the merger or transfer.

“(2) MULTIPLE LEGACY PLANS.—If an employer is obligated to contribute to more than one legacy plan with respect to employees eligible to accrue benefits under more than one composite plan and there is a merger or transfer of such legacy plans, the transition contribution rate applicable to the legacy plan resulting from the merger or transfer with respect to that employer shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of section 440A(d)(2)(B).”.

<AUTODATE>

To Whom It May Concern,

This letter is to provide information to you regarding the functions being performed by Contract Postal Units, Community Post Offices, and Village Post Offices in support of the essential government services being provided by the United States Postal Service ("USPS or "Postal Service") to the American people. These facilities are under contract with the Postal Service to provide access to postal products and services in support of the Postal Service’s ongoing operations.

The Postal Service’s provision of postal services throughout the United States is not affected by State and local government actions that are restricting commercial and personal activities in response to the Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID)-19 pandemic. The Postal Service is an entity of the federal government, and the continued provision of postal services to the American people is designated as an essential function under federal law.

The Postal Service relies on its suppliers to provide this critical government service. The Postal Service’s network of contractor-operated retail facilities enables the Postal Service to provide the American people with the ability to reasonably access postal services in communities throughout the United States, in conformance with federal law. Many of these contractor-operated facilities also provide postal delivery services, by providing P.O Boxes.

Postal and shipping workers, including those in the private sector, are also considered essential critical infrastructure workers under recent guidance issued by the Department of Homeland Security. Guidance issued by the White House and CDC has also indicated that such industries have a special responsibility to maintain normal work schedules.

Therefore, the Postal Service considers that the continued operations of this network of contractor-operated facilities is vital to the Postal Service’s continued performance of its essential functions.

Questions regarding this letter may be directed to the Supply Management group within the Postal Service at (insert phone number).

Dear Mr. President:

We, the undersigned organizations, applaud the Administration and Congress for their swift actions to mitigate the impact of the unfolding Coronavirus pandemic. As our nation deals with this unprecedented public health crisis, we would like to emphasize to you and our senior government leaders that the transportation and goods movement industry stands ready and able to play a pivotal role in promoting economic growth while assisting with pandemic healthcare relief.

Commercial transportation firms will be essential in our country’s ability to restore economic health, vitality and a return to everyday life. As the federal, state and local governments take steps to limit the spread of the Coronavirus, it is crucial that such actions do not inadvertently encumber the vital role of package and mail delivery services. We therefore write to encourage you, the Vice President, and the Coronavirus Task Force to reaffirm that transportation and shipping service providers, to include air, ground and ocean networks, are critical industries that should not be hindered by unnecessary restrictions impeding our ability to deliver.

Transportation service providers and shipping/postal operators have already been recognized by the Department of Homeland Security and Presidential Policy Directives as Critical Infrastructure industries. All of these firms utilize sophisticated networks of transportation modes including aviation, rail, ocean and truck to provide final-mile delivery for consumer goods, food, medical supplies and devices, among other items. Given the current disruption to the daily life of many Americans, there is even greater demand, and reliance upon, our services. Our organizations have implemented increased measures to ensure the safety of our people, our customers, and the general public.

It is imperative that precautionary actions taken by federal, state or municipal governments do not impose unnecessary burdens or logistical complications on package and mail delivery services, or on the people that provide those services, including our pilots, couriers, hub operators and truck drivers. Such unintended negative consequences will hamper our ability to reach businesses and consumers that are relying upon timely and dependable delivery. Neither restrictive public policies that impede interstate commerce (i.e. – Article I, Section 8 of the U.S. Constitution) should be enacted, nor should new local government initiatives create a regulatory patchwork that hinders operational efficiency.

Mr. President, the spread of the Coronavirus in the U.S. is testing government institutions, challenging private industry, and placing inordinate demands on our fellow citizens. As our nation mobilizes to mitigate the impact of the pandemic, we ask that you and your Coronavirus Task Force reiterate the valuable role our firms play in this regard, and discourage states and localities from implementing public policies that restrict our ability to serve the American people.
We stand ready and willing to continue this important service to our nation, and will continue to work with federal, state and local governments in a coordinated fashion to help our employees deliver for America in the safest possible manner while also keeping our employees and the customers they serve safe too.

Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr. President:

We, the undersigned organizations, applaud the Administration and Congress for their swift actions to mitigate the impact of the unfolding Coronavirus pandemic. As our nation deals with this unprecedented public health crisis, we would like to emphasize to you and our senior government leaders that the transportation and goods movement industry stands ready and able to play a pivotal role in promoting economic growth while assisting with pandemic healthcare relief.

Commercial transportation firms will be essential in our country’s ability to restore economic health, vitality and a return to everyday life. As the federal, state and local governments take steps to limit the spread of the Coronavirus, it is crucial that such actions do not inadvertently encumber the vital role of package and mail delivery services. We therefore write to encourage you, the Vice President, and the Coronavirus Task Force to reaffirm that transportation and shipping service providers, to include air, ground and ocean networks, are critical industries that should not be hindered by unnecessary restrictions impeding our ability to deliver.

Transportation service providers and shipping/postal operators have already been recognized by the Department of Homeland Security and Presidential Policy Directives as Critical Infrastructure industries. All of these firms utilize sophisticated networks of transportation modes including aviation, rail, ocean and truck to provide final-mile delivery for consumer goods, food, medical supplies and devices, among other items. Given the current disruption to the daily life of many Americans, there is even greater demand, and reliance upon, our services. Our organizations have implemented increased measures to ensure the safety of our people, our customers, and the general public.

It is imperative that precautionary actions taken by federal, state or municipal governments do not impose unnecessary burdens or logistical complications on package and mail delivery services, or on the people that provide those services, including our pilots, couriers, hub operators and truck drivers. Such unintended negative consequences will hamper our ability to reach businesses and consumers that are relying upon timely and dependable delivery. Neither restrictive public policies that impede interstate commerce (i.e. – Article I, Section 8 of the U.S. Constitution) should be enacted, nor should new local government initiatives create a regulatory patchwork that hinders operational efficiency.

Mr. President, the spread of the Coronavirus in the U.S. is testing government institutions, challenging private industry, and placing inordinate demands on our fellow citizens. As our nation mobilizes to mitigate the impact of the pandemic, we ask that you and your Coronavirus Task Force reiterate the valuable role our firms play in this regard, and discourage states and localities from implementing public policies that restrict our ability to serve the American people.
We stand ready and willing to continue this important service to our nation, and will continue to work with federal, state and local governments in a coordinated fashion to help our employees deliver for America in the safest possible manner while also keeping our employees and the customers they serve safe too.

Sincerely,

Chris Spear

achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.

current contracts with incumbent suppliers Office Depot and Staples are due to expire on January 31, 2020. After a best value determination, the Postal Service intends to award two contracts with a total period of performance of seven (7) years for an estimated total value of $310,000,000. achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.

<td>The purpose of this procurement is to contract for international commercial mail delivery to include in country delivery to the international recipient. The Postal Service's Global Business Solutions group (GB) seeks to enhance the organization's international operational efficiency and reduce costs for shipment of commercial goods within the global marketplace, inclusive of 213 destinating countries, dependencies, and areas of sovereignty. The resulting contracts are targeted to achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.</td>

<td>The purpose of this procurement is to contract for international commercial mail delivery to include in country delivery to the international recipient. The Postal Service's Global Business Solutions group (GB) seeks to enhance the organization's international operational efficiency and reduce costs for shipment of commercial goods within the global marketplace, inclusive of 213 destinating countries, dependencies, and areas of sovereignty. The resulting contracts are targeted to achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.</td>

The purpose of this procurement is to contract for international commercial mail delivery to include in-country delivery to the international recipient. The Postal Service’s Global Business Solutions group (GB) seeks to enhance the organization’s international operational efficiency and reduce costs for shipment of commercial goods within the global marketplace, inclusive of 213 destinating countries, dependencies, and areas of sovereignty. The resulting contracts are targeted to achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.

achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.

Based on a noncompetitive solicitation, contract award to support requirements for New and Refurbished Collection Boxes is planned. Models of New and Refurbished Collection Boxes include 1170K Standard Collection Box, 1171K Relay Box, 1170T Large Collection Box, 1170EXP Express Collection Box, 1170V Single Chute Jumbo Collection Box, and 1170S Double Chute Jumbo Collection Box.

An Indefinite Delivery – Indefinite Quantity (IDIQ) Fixed Price with Economic Price Adjustment (EPA) contract will be awarded. Base award of three (3) years with two (2) two-year renewal options not to exceed seven (7) years.

This action is to exercise the first of two (2), two-year renewal options for the vehicle fleet tire IDIQ contract. The potential dollar amount under the modification is

$61 million over 2 years
This noncompetitive Indefinite Delivery indefinite Quantity (IDIQ) contract is to renew IBM software maintenance that is utilized in over 200 major USPS systems based on data from the Enterprise Information Repository (EIR). USPS uses 40 individual IBM product suites to support these 200+ systems. A few of the major software programs include WAS, WebSphere Application Server Network Deployment (WASND) and MQ. WAS and WASND are software that perform the role of a web application server. Together, these products deliver a high performance transaction engine that help build, run, integrate, and manage web based business applications in a large-scale IT environment such as USPS. The contract is a 5 year term and has a minimum contract value of $16.8M and a maximum contract value of $100M.

The Postal Service has a continuing national requirement for Office Products items, which include Ink Toner, Copy Paper, Pens, Pencils, and other general office supplies. The current national Office Products contracts will expire on January 31, 2020. As stated in Solicitation 3CD-19-A-0003, the USPS intends to award one or more contract(s) to provide Office Products items on a national basis. After careful review of the supplier proposals and market research for the Office Products category, through prudent considerations and collaboration by consensus, the Postal Service is in the final stages of concluding the process for the award of two Indefinite Delivery-Indefinite Quantity (IDIQ) national contracts for a base term of three (3) years, with two, 2-year options to ensure continuation of supply for Office Products items. The contract is a 5 year term and has a minimum contract value of $16.8M and a maximum contract value of $100M.
current contracts with incumbent suppliers Office Depot and Staples are due to expire on January 31, 2020. After a best value determination, the Postal Service intends to award two contracts with a total period of performance of seven (7) years for an estimated total value of $310,000,000. The actual value will depend on savings realized through ongoing volume leveraging, product standardization efforts, and the results of dynamic competition among the contracted suppliers throughout the contract term.

Final contract award is subject to mandatory review and approval processes.

achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.

| 20/2-23 | 3/16/2020 | Betsy Repper Purchasing Specialist Transportation Services | The purpose of this procurement is to contract for international commercial mail delivery to include in-country delivery to the international recipient. The Postal Service’s Global Business Solutions group (GB) seeks to enhance the organization's international operational efficiency and reduce costs for shipment of commercial goods within the global marketplace, inclusive of 213 destinating countries, dependencies, and areas of sovereignty. The resulting contracts are targeted to achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers. | $4.4 billion over 7 years and 7 suppliers | No [for discussion at DC meeting] |

| 20/2-23 | 3/16/2020 | Betsy Repper | The purpose of this procurement is to contract for international commercial mail delivery to include in-country delivery to the international recipient. The Postal Service’s Global Business Solutions group (GB) seeks to enhance the organization’s international operational efficiency and reduce costs for shipment of commercial goods within the global marketplace, inclusive of 213 destinating countries, dependencies, and areas of sovereignty. The resulting contracts are targeted to achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers. | $4.4 billion over 7 years and 7 suppliers | No | [for discussion at DC meeting] |

This noncompetitive Indefinite Delivery indefinite Quantity (IDIQ) contract is to renew IBM software maintenance that is utilized in over 200 major USPS systems based on data from the Enterprise Information Repository (EIR). USPS uses 40 individual IBM product suites to support these 200+ systems. A few of the major software programs include WAS, WebSphere Application Server Network Deployment (WASND) and MQ. WAS and WASND are software that perform the role of a web application server. Together, these products deliver a high performance transaction engine that help build, run, integrate, and manage web based business applications in a large-scale IT environment such as USPS.

The contract is a 5 year term and has a minimum contract value of $16.8M and a maximum contract value of $100M.

current contracts with incumbent suppliers Office Depot and Staples are due to expire on January 31, 2020. After a best value determination, the Postal Service intends to award two contracts with a total period of performance of seven (7) years for an estimated total value of $310,000,000. The actual value will depend on savings realized through ongoing volume leveraging, product standardization efforts, and the results of dynamic competition among the contracted suppliers throughout the contract term.

Final contract award is subject to mandatory review and approval processes.

| Date | Purchasing Specialist | The purpose of this procurement is to contract for international commercial mail delivery to include in country delivery to the international recipient. The Postal Service's Global Business Solutions group (GB) seeks to enhance the organization's international operational efficiency and reduce costs for shipment of commercial goods within the global marketplace, inclusive of 213 destinating countries, dependencies, and areas of sovereignty. The resulting contracts are targeted to achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers. | $4.4 billion over 7 years and 7 suppliers | No | [for discussion at DC meeting] |

This noncompetitive Indefinite Delivery indefinite Quantity (IDIQ) contract is to renew IBM software maintenance that is utilized in over 200 major USPS systems based on data from the Enterprise Information Repository (EIR). USPS uses 40 individual IBM product suites to support these 200+ systems. A few of the major software programs include WAS, WebSphere Application Server Network Deployment (WASND) and MQ. WAS and WASND are software that perform the role of a web application server. Together, these products deliver a high performance transaction engine that help build, run, integrate, and manage web based business applications in a large-scale IT environment such as USPS. The contract is a 5 year term and has a minimum contract value of $16.8M and a maximum contract value of $100M.

The Postal Service has a continuing national requirement for Office Products items, which include Ink Toner, Copy Paper, Pens, Pencils, and other general office supplies. The current national Office Products contracts will expire on January 31, 2020. As stated in Solicitation 3CD-19-A-0003, the USPS intends to award one or more contract(s) to provide Office Products items on a national basis. After careful review of the supplier proposals and market research for the Office Products category, through prudent considerations and collaboration by consensus, the Postal Service is in the final stages of concluding the process for the award of two Indefinite Delivery-Indefinite Quantity (IDIQ) national contracts for a base term of three (3) years, with two, 2-year options to ensure continuation of supply for Office Products items. The | $310 million over 7 years | No | No |
current contracts with incumbent suppliers Office Depot and Staples are due to expire on January 31, 2020. After a best value determination, the Postal Service intends to award two contracts with a total period of performance of seven (7) years for an estimated total value of $310,000,000. The actual value will depend on savings realized through ongoing volume leveraging, product standardization efforts, and the results of dynamic competition among the contracted suppliers throughout the contract term.

Final contract award is subject to mandatory review and approval processes.

achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.

<td>The purpose of this procurement is to contract for international commercial mail delivery to include in country delivery to the international recipient. The Postal Service's Global Business Solutions group (GB) seeks to enhance the organization's international operational efficiency and reduce costs for shipment of commercial goods within the global marketplace, inclusive of 213 destinating countries, dependencies, and areas of sovereignty. The resulting contracts are targeted to achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.

achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.

achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.

To achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.

achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.

|            |                        | The purpose of this procurement is to contract for international commercial mail delivery to include in-country delivery to the international recipient. The Postal Service’s Global Business Solutions group (GB) seeks to enhance the organization’s international operational efficiency and reduce costs for shipment of commercial goods within the global marketplace, inclusive of 213 destinating countries, dependencies, and areas of sovereignty. The resulting contracts are targeted to achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers. |

<td>The purpose of this procurement is to contract for international commercial mail delivery to include in country delivery to the international recipient. The Postal Service’s Global Business Solutions group (GB) seeks to enhance the organization's international operational efficiency and reduce costs for shipment of commercial goods within the global marketplace, inclusive of 213 destinating countries, dependencies, and areas of sovereignty. The resulting contracts are targeted to achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers.</td>

| Date    | Contract Date | Name                | Position                       | The purpose of this procurement is to contract for international commercial mail delivery to include in-country delivery to the international recipient. The Postal Service’s Global Business Solutions group (GB) seeks to enhance the organization’s international operational efficiency and reduce costs for shipment of commercial goods within the global marketplace, inclusive of 213 destinating countries, dependencies, and areas of sovereignty. The resulting contracts are targeted to achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers. | Award amount: $125,000,000 (one hundred twenty five million dollars and no cents) | Tetra Tech Inc.

| Date | 3/16/2020 | Betsy Repper | The purpose of this procurement is to contract for international commercial mail delivery to include in-country delivery to the international recipient. The Postal Service’s Global Business Solutions group (GB) seeks to enhance the organization’s international operational efficiency and reduce costs for shipment of commercial goods within the global marketplace, inclusive of 213 destinating countries, dependencies, and areas of sovereignty. The resulting contracts are targeted to achieve value-added last mile delivery services and increase efficiency required as a result of the announced and planned exit of the United States from the Universal Postal Union (UPU). This is a new sourcing requirement. The United States currently provides international mail delivery through the UPU, a specialized agency of the United Nations that coordinates postal policies among member nations, in addition to a worldwide postal system. The UPU sets the operational, payment system, and security standards for the global postal network, and importantly establishes international postal delivery prices. Although the decision was made for the USPS to remain in the UPU, it is also looking to increase its overall competitiveness through newly developed in-country delivery solutions. Significant opportunities exist within the marketplace to provide value to U.S. merchants and grow USPS exports by improving export compliance, customs clearance, and last mile delivery performance from both a cost and service perspective. USPS therefore intends to secure delivery to the addressee at competitive rates with independently operated, for-profit commercial delivery providers. $4.4 billion over 7 years and 7 suppliers | No | [for discussion at DC meeting] |

Dear Representative/Senator ___,

We are writing to share with you the actions the United States Postal Service is taking to meet the needs of the American public and to protect our employees and customers as our nation responds to the Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic, and to also inform you of the serious impacts that the pandemic is having on the Postal Service’s financial condition.

As you know, our Board is comprised of both Republicans and Democrats, and we take pride in operating in a very bipartisan manner. We thank President Trump for appointing, and the Senate for confirming, a Board whose members bring unique capabilities, diverse perspectives, and broad experiences, and who are all committed to putting personal politics aside to represent the public interest and to ensure that the Postal Service continues to provide its essential services for the American people, both today and in the years to come. Since taking office, the Board has worked extensively to craft a plan to address the Postal Service’s financial condition, a process that has taken on new urgency considering the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the Postal Service. The $10 billion of additional borrowing authority provided in the CARES Act is a good start, and we also thank the Administration and Congress for taking that important action. However, as detailed below, this additional authority is not sufficient to address the near-term liquidity crisis that the Postal Service is facing as a result of the pandemic, which requires Congress to take further immediate action to ensure our continued ability to provide our critical services. Below, we address our recommendations to Congress for both immediate and longer-term relief, which have been adopted unanimously by the Board.

The Board and Postal Service management team, along with the 630,000 employees of the Postal Service, remain highly focused on our mission of binding the nation together and providing the American people with prompt, reliable, and universal postal delivery services. Our mission has never been more important than now, as Americans shelter in place, work from home, or otherwise practice social distancing. We operate by statute as a “basic and fundamental service” provided by the Federal Government to the American people. In addition, the continued provision of postal services is designated as an essential function of the Government during times of emergency pursuant to the framework of the National Continuity Policy, and the postal sector is also designated by the Department of Homeland Security as part of the nation’s critical infrastructure. Six days per week, and in some instances seven, the men and women of the Postal Service accept, process, transport, and deliver important mail and vital packages, including important governmental information and benefits such as Census materials, social security and stimulus checks, and materials advising the public about COVID-19; materials relating to elections, including absentee ballots and political mail; materials that are essential to the functioning of our economy, such as transactional mail; and packages containing sustaining necessities, including medicines and other goods purchased online.

We are proud of the essential services that the Postal Service provides to the American people, and of the fact that the Postal Service consistently receives the highest public approval ratings
of any entity of the Federal Government. Indeed a recent survey by the Pew Research Center released on April 9 shows that an overwhelming 91 percent of respondents have a favorable view of USPS, and this favorable opinion is shared nearly equally by Republicans and Democrats alike. This standing with the American people is based in no small part on the Postal Service’s nonpartisan, nonpolitical and equalitarian nature. In that regard, you can be assured that the Board fully recognizes that it is vital to the achievement of the Postal Service’s mission that there is no actual or appearance of political bias or partiality on the part of the Postal Service. As such, we will be vigilant to ensure that the Postal Service does not endorse the political activities of any group, and we will continue to take appropriate legal and other actions to ensure that no group uses our trademarks or other intellectual property in connection with their political activities to suggest or infer that the Postal Service supports their political viewpoints. The Postal Service will remain politically neutral, nonpartisan, unbiased, and impartial, and we will not allow this great American institution to be misused as a part of the partisan political fray.

Postal Service Response to the Pandemic

The Board has also been holding meetings and briefings at regular intervals to receive the latest information and provide strategic direction to management on responding to the pandemic. We have established a dedicated COVID-19 Command Response leadership team to direct employee, operational, business, and customer continuity efforts during this extraordinary time. We are fully committed to being a source of consistency and reliability for American households and businesses throughout this national emergency, and to ensuring that the public can confidently depend upon our mailing and shipping services, both today and in the future. As we provide our vital service, we have been adjusting our policies and operating procedures in a manner consistent with the advice of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), and other public health officials.

In this regard, the specific measures we have implemented in response to the COVID-19 outbreak include the following:

Keeping our employees safe. The essential services we provide are only possible due to the collective and individual efforts of the dedicated public servants who work for the Postal Service. We are doing everything that we can to protect the health and safety of our employees while they are performing their jobs, in a manner consistent with the advice of medical and public health professionals. To achieve this goal, the COVID-19 Command Response team at Headquarters is working closely with HHS, CDC, and other public health officials to receive their latest guidance on appropriate workplace practices. We are adjusting our policies accordingly, and are continually sharing the latest information throughout our organization. Specific actions we have taken include the following:

- Updated our leave policies to allow liberal use of leave, and to therefore give our employees the ability to stay home whenever they feel sick, must provide dependent care, or wish to abide by State or local shelter-in-place requirements. We have been actively encouraging any employee who feels sick to stay home. To facilitate their ability to do so, we entered into MOUs even in advance of the Families First Coronavirus Response Act with our unions and management associations to provide 80 hours of paid leave to employees, including non-career employees, for issues related to COVID-19. We expanded the definition of Sick Leave for Dependent Care for all employees to deal with the cascading closures of primary and secondary schools across the country. While we have taken these steps on our own initiative, we have also ensured that employees will also receive the emergency leave authorized by the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, in addition to what they otherwise have accrued.

- Worked to overcome the challenges in the supply chain to ensure that our employees have ready access to hand sanitizer, and that they receive surgical masks and gloves upon request. This has been a matter of the highest priority for the Postal Service throughout the pandemic. We have shipped over 18 million masks throughout the country to ensure that they are available for our employees, and are working tirelessly to keep the supply chain for critical personal protective equipment flowing in the face of national challenges.

- Reinforced workplace behaviors to ensure that contact amongst our employees and with our customers reflects the best guidance regarding healthy interactions, social distancing, and risk minimization. We have implemented measures at retail facilities and mail processing facilities to ensure appropriate social distancing, including through signage, floor tape, and “cough/sneeze” barriers. We have also changed our delivery procedures to ensure the appropriate social distancing between our letter carriers and customers, such as by eliminating the customer signature requirement for certain deliveries. We are strongly encouraging the use of facial coverings in those environments where social distancing is difficult to maintain, and will continue to evaluate our policies in that regard in light of the evolving circumstances.

- Updated our cleaning policies to ensure that all cleaning in our facilities occurs in a manner consistent with CDC guidance relating to this pandemic.

- Expanded the use of telework for those employees who are able to perform their jobs remotely.

- Issued and continue to issue a daily cadence of communications to employees to ensure they have the latest information and guidance.

Keeping our customers safe. The CDC, the World Health Organization, as well as the U.S. Surgeon General have all said that there is very low risk that this virus is being spread through mail, which should be a comfort to the public. We are also adapting procedures to ensure that we are able to continue to provide service effectively and safely. As noted above, we are reinforcing workplace behaviors to ensure that contact between our employees and customers reflect the best guidance regarding healthy interactions, social distancing, and risk minimization. We are additionally taking steps to ensure that customers can safely come to our retail facilities, such as by limiting the number of individuals who can be in a lobby at any one time, and employing floor tape to ensure that customers waiting in line can maintain the appropriate distance from one another, and from the retail counter.

Network integrity/continuity of operations. The Postal Service is undertaking all reasonable measures to minimize impacts to our customers. Following our normal protocol, we began daily operational assessments and responses as the situation in China was first identified, and are coordinating organization-wide efforts to respond to evolving conditions, and to anticipate and prepare for customer and community needs throughout the country. We are highly confident in our ability to process and deliver the nation’s mail and packages throughout this emergency. We do not expect significant lasting disruption or degradation in the services we provide in the domestic market, though we do anticipate that adjusting local operations in certain areas may be necessary to account for absent employees and other local contingencies, and that such adjustments will likely have temporary service impacts. If, for some reason, we need to curtail or adjust operations in a particular facility or area, activation of localized continuity of operations plans will be implemented to provide required support – similar to planning we implement in the wake of hurricanes, flooding, wildfires and other disruptive events. In addition, given the impact of the pandemic on the availability of transportation, we have also been required to temporarily adjust our service standards for certain of our package products, and we have had to curtail operations to some foreign destinations where transportation is unavailable.

All-government emergency response. The Postal Service is playing an integral role in national emergency response and preparedness. The Postal Service is participating in the National Response Coordination Center (NRCC) headed by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), and will continue to assist FEMA and other agencies in the whole-of-government response to the pandemic. The Postal Service has unique capabilities in this regard, because of our role as the most frequent touchpoint between the American people and the federal government through our nationwide retail and delivery network. For instance, we have leveraged our network to communicate CDC guidance to the public, both by displaying CDC posters in our retail facilities, by providing key information through our digital message boards in our large Post Offices, and by working with the Administration to help design and deliver a postcard from the President to every American household that relayed the key CDC guidance and that informed the recipients about the CDC’s COVID-19 specific website.

Further, we have also donated and delivered 500,000 N-95 masks (which are different from the masks that our employees utilize) that were in excess of our needs to the Department of Health and Human Services for the Strategic National Stockpile for distribution to hospitals and other critical uses. Additionally, we are prepared to assist as necessary with the distribution of other personal protective equipment as a part of the Administration’s pandemic response. Finally, we will be delivering information concerning the stimulus checks that were provided as a part of the CARES Act, and we will also be delivering the physical checks to those who will not be receiving them through direct deposit.

Impact of the Pandemic on the Postal Service’s Financial Condition

While the criticality of the services the Postal Service provides has never been more evident, and we are committed to continuing to fulfill our essential universal service mission, the COVID-19 pandemic has also had drastic impacts on our financial condition. We have experienced significant and sudden declines in mail volume and revenue due to the pandemic. The result is a liquidity crisis that requires immediate action by Congress to ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term.

Our projections of the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic are grounded in three knowns and a significant number of unknowns. The three knowns include what is currently happening with mail volumes, the impact of the last recession (i.e., the Great Recession) on the Postal Service’s volume after GDP growth resumed, and what mailers are communicating to the Postal Service regarding their short-term plans.

The first known is what is currently happening with mail volumes. We are seeing a significant decline across mail products, with growth in packages. All percentages describe the change in mail volume from the same period last year. During the first week of the COVID-impact (March 16-March 21), the Postal Service saw total delivered mail volume (consisting of letters and flats) decline by 5.3%, and these declines have accelerated significantly since then, as follows:

- The week of March 22nd total delivered mail volume declined by 7.5%
- The week of March 29th total delivered mail volume declined by 24.2%
The week of April 5th total delivered mail volume declined by 32.2%.

UPDATE FOR ADDITIONAL WEEKS?

Delivered packages have shown a growth trajectory which has been offsetting a portion of the mail revenues lost in recent weeks. The first week of the COVID-impact (March 16-March 21), the Postal Service saw delivered package volume decline by 1.0%, but since then packages have grown significantly, as follows:

- The week of March 22nd total delivered package volume grew by 5.0%
- The week of March 29th total delivered package volume increased by 11.8%
- The week of April 5th total delivered package volume increased by 20.7%.

UPDATE FOR ADDITIONAL WEEKS?

However, package growth cannot fully counteract the impact of the mail volume declines we are experiencing. In addition, although package growth has accelerated, our current projection is that this trend will not continue and we will likely have declines in packages in the upcoming months. The reasons for this belief are as follows:

- First, some of our customers are already expressing concerns about what they are reading concerning our financial condition and stability, and are pursuing alternatives to move and deliver their products.
- Second, the significant decline in GDP and the increase in the unemployment rate and the resulting decline in consumer income will likely lead to less consumer spending and a decline in the overall package market.
- Third, package growth will also be likely be impacted by supply chain disruptions across the system, as shortages due to production and transportation disruptions, not only in the U.S. but throughout the world, ripple through the economy, thus reducing package volume.
- Finally, much of the package growth seen in recent weeks was fueled by consumers stocking up on basic needed household items and stockpiling food. Much of this spending was funneled through e-commerce because consumers did not want to physically shop in stores. As consumers reach higher inventory levels of household staples, repeat purchasing will decline. Additionally, as society begins to open up, many (but not all) consumers will return to shopping in stores.

The known impacts experienced by the Postal Service during and after the last recession in 2008-2009 also influence our analysis. During the Great Recession, the Postal Service lost significant mail volume that never returned; total volumes experienced a steep downward step between 2007 and 2009 and thereafter returned to a more gradual decline that has continued ever since. Prior to the recession, the Postal Service had total mail volume of 212B pieces in FY2007. After the recession, the Postal Service had 168B pieces within the system in FY2011, a decline of 20.7% of total mail volume. Mail volume declined by 43.9B pieces and $9.2B in total revenue were lost during this period, with $6.8 billion of revenue lost in 2009 alone.

The final known factor is what mailers are telling us about their short-term plans. For the most part, major mailers are expecting a slow-down in mailing due to the economic impact across the economy. Advertisers have reduced spending, which is having a significant effect on marketing mail, with marketing mail volume down 42.5% in the most recent week.
There are three significant components to the COVID-19 impact that are unknown and make the effects of the pandemic on mail volumes extremely difficult to quantify:

- Depth of the short-term impact during Calendar Q2 and Q3. Specifically, how bad will economic conditions get?
- Duration of the economic impact. This is directly tied to how long the economy remains shuttered and will have a significant influence on FY2021 volumes and revenues.
- Volume levels to which mail returns after the pandemic is concluded. This will influence our financial outlook in future years. It is possible that many companies never return to business and that some portion of our volume will be permanently lost to digital alternatives. (As noted previously, after the Great Recession, a large portion of mail volume never returned and we suffered a permanent decline from FY2007 levels of over 20%).

Each of these components will ultimately be influenced by the degree to which GDP declines in the coming months, the increase in the unemployment rate and the persistence of higher unemployment levels, declines in business and consumer confidence and investment spending (which often significantly lag the beginning of an “official” recovery), and the timing of the reopening of segments of the economy. None of these elements are known or can be predicted with any real degree of certainty at this time. The estimates for GDP decline are diverse, with a recent survey of economists by the Wall Street Journal reporting a median decline in GDP of 26.5% in Postal Quarter 3 (April – June, 2020). In addition, the same survey of economists suggests a median projection for the unemployment rate by June 2020 of 13%. To put that GDP loss in perspective, the Great Recession caused a 3.3% decline in GDP in FY2009; the median decline in GDP projected for this quarter (April – September 2020) is 7 times worse than the worst quarter GDP experienced in the last recession.

These GDP and unemployment projections, when considered in light of the Postal Service’s financial results during the Great Recession, and the most recent volume decline information, have led us to the following initial estimates for the next 18 months, and for the longer-term:

- Short-term impact - Postal Q3 & Q4 (April – September)
  - We expect a significant short-term impact for the remainder of FY2020 due to the economic impact of COVID-19 which will cause projected declines of approximately 50% in volumes in Q3 and 57% in Q4, based on the speed at which volume has already declined, the GDP and unemployment projections estimated by economists and information communicated by mailers.

- Medium-term impact - Fiscal Year 2021 (October 2020 – September 2021)
  - As time moves forward and the economic lock-down begins to lessen, we project a gradual return of volumes beginning in Q1, FY 2021, to about 60% of the corresponding pre-COVID levels in Q1.
  - For the rest of FY 2021, we estimate that volumes will gradually return to about 74% of pre-COVID volume levels. As noted, current projections by economists suggest the economic impact of the pandemic will be worse than the Great Recession (when we permanently lost over 20% of volumes).
  - For the entirety of FY 2021, we estimate that total volume will be approximately 70% of pre-COVID volume levels.

- Long-term impact - Fiscal Year 2022 and beyond

1 WSJ Survey of Economists - https://www.wsj.com/graphics/econsurvey/
The longer-term projection suggests a return to a “new normal” of about 75% of pre-COVID volume levels, which is slightly worse than the last recession when we returned to a new normal of approximately 80% of pre-recession volumes. We then expect the long-term gradual secular volume declines that we were experiencing prior to the pandemic will resume for the next 10 years.

All of these volume assumptions are dependent on many facets of the COVID-19 disruption that are as yet unknown. For example, the longer the economic lock-down continues and more businesses are disrupted, the higher the likelihood that the level of volume return could be less than currently projected. Likewise, if the economic lock-down retreats in the coming weeks and businesses return to normal quickly, it is possible that the volume levels could be greater than these projections. Ultimately, given the significant uncertainty concerning these matters, our projections, while severe, should not be considered a worst case, because it is conceivable that the impact of COVID-19 on mail volumes could be even more dire than we are anticipating.

Based on these projections, it is expected that the Postal Service’s financial condition will worsen significantly compared to previous estimates. Our current projections, which are based upon the assumptions set forth herein, indicate that the Postal Service will be essentially illiquid in September 2020 if additional cash is not obtained (either through the additional $10B Treasury loan under the CARES Act, or alternative funding mechanisms). At that time, the Postal Service would have less than one payroll of cash remaining (payroll is ~$2B bi-weekly), with a negative cash balance projected for October, when the $1.5B workers’ compensation cash payment is due to the Department of Labor. While previous estimates put this date as early as June, this has been extended until September due to our ability to delay payment of employer Social Security taxes pursuant to the CARES Act (~$1.1B thru September 2020), and our ability to obtain an additional $3.4B from the Federal Financing Bank pursuant to a short-term note that was available to us under our existing statutory borrowing authority. A portion of this note ($400M) must be repaid by September 2020, while the remaining $3B must be repaid by April 2, 2021.

We are in discussions with the Treasury regarding the borrowing authority in the CARES Act, including the terms and conditions that would apply to such borrowing. We anticipate that this borrowing will be provided to us and that we will be required to borrow the full $10 billion that is available, for the reasons noted herein.

However, even with this additional $10B, the Postal Service will continue to face a liquidity crisis in the near-term. Over the next 18 months (to the end of the next fiscal year, September 2021), we project our net loss will increase by $22.8B versus previous projections as a direct result of the impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic. Based upon our current projections, we will run out of cash in April 2021 even if we secure the additional $10B in borrowing under the CARES Act. Finally, over the longer term (10 years), we project our net loss will increase by $54.3B versus previous projections, directly due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Postal Service will continue to take aggressive action to reduce expenses commensurate with these volume declines through overtime and overall workhour reductions, and curtailing of all travel and other discretionary spending. However, due to the impact of COVID-19 on employee availability, the fixity of our network, and the costs associated with the leave provisions of the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, our ability to significantly reduce expenses in the short-run is limited. For instance, any savings associated with reduced workhours are diminished because the new leave provisions of the Families First Coronavirus Relief Act have added additional costs to the Postal Service that are estimated to be approximately $600M-$900M, depending on how many of our employees suffer a qualifying condition related to COVID-19, and on how many of our employees have children and dependents out of school/daycare. Unlike other entities, these expenses are not reimbursable to the Postal Service under the statute. In addition, it is expected that additional supplies and cleaning services required due to COVID-19 could cost the Postal Service over $100M over the next 6 months.

Given the economic uncertainty underlying the pandemic, the Postal Service will continuously monitor and evaluate new information as it becomes available, including current mail volumes, announcements by governments concerning the opening of aspects of the economy, input from our mail and shipping customers, as well as economic projections for the broader economy. This new information will necessitate updates to our forecast and the Postal Service will incorporate on an ongoing basis any relevant new information as it becomes available to ensure we have the most updated assessment of the pandemic on our financial condition.

Legislative Relief Sought from Congress

There is an immediate need for Congress to give the Postal Service relief to address the direct impacts that the COVID-19 pandemic has had and will have on our financial condition, so that we can ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term. To address the impacts of the pandemic, we seek the following four items from Congress:

- $25B in funds to cover the estimated COVID-19 losses over the next two years;
- $25B in funds for modernization, to address the long-term undercapitalization of the Postal Service that has been exacerbated by the pandemic, which will help the Postal Service weather the longer term economic impacts to our business resulting from the pandemic and ensure that our critical infrastructure will be ready to support the Nation for current and future needs;
- Satisfaction of our $14.4B in outstanding debt to the Federal Financing Bank;
- Unrestricted borrowing authority up to $25B, by consolidating our existing borrowing authority of $15B under Title 39 of the United States Code, and $10B under the CARES Act, based on streamlined procedures, and by eliminating the $3B annual borrowing limitation.

As noted above, we estimate that the impact of COVID-19 will increase our net losses over the next 18 months by approximately $23B. Our request for $25B is intended to cover these losses, with a small cushion to account for contingencies, and hence to ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term. In this regard, our projections are not the worst case that could happen: in fact, we are not sure where the bottom is in terms of volume declines. As a result, it is important to build in some cushion to help ensure we remain liquid.

The longer-term impact of COVID-19 is estimated at almost $55B. In particular, the severe impact that the pandemic will have on our cash flows over the longer-term, due to the permanent shift in volumes, will exacerbate the fact that we are severely undercapitalized, by requiring us to further defer critically important capital investments. Modernizing our operations and infrastructure, such as through the purchase of new delivery vehicles, automated mail processing equipment, and other capital investments, is essential to our ability to continue providing our vital services to the American people in a prompt, reliable, and efficient manner.
We therefore are requesting $25B to address the impact that the pandemic will have on our ability to modernize our critical operations infrastructure. This will not only have a direct benefit to the American people in terms of ensuring our ability to provide our services, but will also act as a stimulus to the economy as our Nation recovers from the pandemic, as these funds will be used to purchase goods from suppliers in the private sector.

Finally, eliminating our current debt and creating a streamlined borrowing process moving forward will give the Postal Service immediate financial relief, as well as critical flexibility to ensure our continued ability to operate in the short-term. We propose that future borrowings from Treasury or the Federal Financing Bank occur through the framework of the note purchase agreement through which we borrowed funds from Federal Financing Bank for the past two decades. The note purchase agreement provided a streamlined mechanism for such borrowings, and gives the Postal Service needed certainty as to its ability to readily access cash. In addition, the agreement sets forth reasonable and appropriate terms and conditions that protect the interests of both the Postal Service and Treasury.

While this immediate action by Congress is critical to ensuring that we can withstand the direct impacts of the pandemic in the near term, it is important to note that it will not resolve the fundamental problems with the Postal Service’s business model, or restore the Postal Service to longer-term financial stability. In fact, this short-term relief will only allow us to maintain operations until 2023, if provided in full.

The Postal Service operates under a statutory and regulatory structure that does not give us sufficient flexibility to reduce costs and increase revenue to meet the challenges of the secular decline in the use of the mail. The Board also believes that it is important that Congress eventually act to address these business model issues, to ensure that the Postal Service can be financially stable over the next 10 years, though to be clear this is not something we are seeking immediately. That said, within the next 12-18 months, the Board also recommends that Congress will need to enact financial reforms that give us greater pricing and product flexibility, as well as the ability to address our retiree health benefits program, which is not properly integrated with Medicare, and our unaffordable pension payment obligations. Absent such reforms, which we believe have broad support among postal stakeholders, it would be necessary for the Board to adopt more significant and controversial structural reforms to ensure our ability to survive over the next 10 years.

Conclusion

The lives of the American public have changed dramatically over the last several weeks, and it is during difficult times when the true value of the Postal Service to the nation is most evident. One of our strengths as an organization is our stabilizing role in a crisis: the American people take confidence from our regular, daily role in their community and in their lives. We are proud of the heroism shown by our employees during this pandemic, by their steadfast determination to continue working every day to provide our vital service to the American people. Our request to Congress for the short-term financial relief discussed in this letter is designed to ensure that we can continue to serve the essential needs of the American people as a part of the nation’s critical infrastructure.

Please let us know if you have any questions regarding this letter, and we look forward to continuing to work with you and the Administration in addressing the Postal Service’s financial challenges, and in preserving this great American institution.

ALL OTHER BOARD MEMBERS
Dear Representative/Senator ___.

We are writing to share with you the actions the United States Postal Service is taking to meet the needs of the American public and to protect our employees and customers as our nation responds to the Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic, and to also inform you of the serious impacts that the pandemic is having on the Postal Service’s financial condition.

As you know, our Board is comprised of both Republicans and Democrats, and we take pride in operating in a very bipartisan manner. We thank President Trump for appointing, and the Senate for confirming, a Board whose members bring unique capabilities, diverse perspectives, and broad experiences, and who are all committed to putting personal politics aside to represent the public interest and to ensure that the Postal Service continues to provide its essential services for the American people, both today and in the years to come. Since taking office, the Board has worked extensively to craft a plan to address the Postal Service’s financial condition, a process that has taken on new urgency considering the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the Postal Service. The $10 billion of additional borrowing authority provided in the CARES Act is a good start, and we also thank the Administration and Congress for taking that important action. However, as detailed below, this additional authority is not sufficient to address the near-term liquidity crisis that the Postal Service is facing as a result of the pandemic, which requires Congress to take further immediate action to ensure our continued ability to provide our critical services. Below, we address our recommendations to Congress for both immediate and longer-term relief, which have been adopted unanimously by the Board.

The Board and Postal Service management team, along with the 630,000 employees of the Postal Service, remain highly focused on our mission of binding the nation together and providing the American people with prompt, reliable, and universal postal delivery services. Our mission has never been more important than now, as Americans shelter in place, work from home, or otherwise practice social distancing. We operate by statute as a “basic and fundamental service” provided by the Federal Government to the American people. In addition, the continued provision of postal services is designated as an essential function of the Government during times of emergency pursuant to the framework of the National Continuity Policy, and the postal sector is also designated by the Department of Homeland Security as part of the nation’s critical infrastructure. Six days per week, and in some instances seven, the men and women of the Postal Service accept, process, transport, and deliver important mail and vital packages, including important governmental information and benefits such as Census materials, social security and stimulus checks, and materials advising the public about COVID-19; materials relating to elections, including absentee ballots and political mail; materials that are essential to the functioning of our economy, such as transactional mail; and packages containing sustaining necessities, including medicines and other goods purchased online.

We are proud of the essential services that the Postal Service provides to the American people, and of the fact that the Postal Service consistently receives the highest public approval ratings
of any entity of the Federal Government. Indeed a recent survey by the Pew Research Center released on April 9 shows that an overwhelming 91 percent of respondents have a favorable view of USPS, and this favorable opinion is shared nearly equally by Republicans and Democrats alike. This standing with the American people is based in no small part on the Postal Service’s nonpartisan, nonpolitical and equalitarian nature. In that regard, you can be assured that the Board fully recognizes that it is vital to the achievement of the Postal Service’s mission that there is no actual or appearance of political bias or partiality on the part of the Postal Service. As such, we will be vigilant to ensure that the Postal Service does not endorse the political activities of any group, and we will continue to take appropriate legal and other actions to ensure that no group uses our trademarks or other intellectual property in connection with their political activities to suggest or infer that the Postal Service supports their political viewpoints. The Postal Service will remain politically neutral, nonpartisan, unbiased, and impartial, and we will not allow this great American institution to be misused as a part of the partisan political fray.

Postal Service Response to the Pandemic

The Board has also been holding meetings and briefings at regular intervals to receive the latest information and provide strategic direction to management on responding to the pandemic. We have established a dedicated COVID-19 Command Response leadership team to direct employee, operational, business, and customer continuity efforts during this extraordinary time. We are fully committed to being a source of consistency and reliability for American households and businesses throughout this national emergency, and to ensuring that the public can confidently depend upon our mailing and shipping services, both today and in the future. As we provide our vital service, we have been adjusting our policies and operating procedures in a manner consistent with the advice of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), and other public health officials.

In this regard, the specific measures we have implemented in response to the COVID-19 outbreak include the following:

Keeping our employees safe. The essential services we provide are only possible due to the collective and individual efforts of the dedicated public servants who work for the Postal Service. We are doing everything that we can to protect the health and safety of our employees while they are performing their jobs, in a manner consistent with the advice of medical and public health professionals. To achieve this goal, the COVID-19 Command Response team at Headquarters is working closely with HHS, CDC, and other public health officials to receive their latest guidance on appropriate workplace practices. We are adjusting our policies accordingly, and are continually sharing the latest information throughout our organization. Specific actions we have taken include the following:

- Updated our leave policies to allow liberal use of leave, and to therefore give our employees the ability to stay home whenever they feel sick, must provide dependent care, or wish to abide by State or local shelter-in-place requirements. We have been actively encouraging any employee who feels sick to stay home. To facilitate their ability to do so, we entered into MOUs even in advance of the Families First Coronavirus Response Act with our unions and management associations to provide 80 hours of paid leave to employees, including non-career employees, for issues related to COVID-19. We expanded the definition of Sick Leave for Dependent Care for all employees to deal with the cascading closures of primary and secondary schools across the country. While we have taken these steps on our own initiative, we have also ensured that employees will also receive the emergency leave authorized by the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, in addition to what they otherwise have accrued.

- Worked to overcome the challenges in the supply chain to ensure that our employees have ready access to hand sanitizer, and that they receive surgical masks and gloves upon request. This has been a matter of the highest priority for the Postal Service throughout the pandemic. We have shipped over 18 million masks throughout the country to ensure that they are available for our employees, and are working tirelessly to keep the supply chain for critical personal protective equipment flowing in the face of national challenges.

- Reinforced workplace behaviors to ensure that contact amongst our employees and with our customers reflects the best guidance regarding healthy interactions, social distancing, and risk minimization. We have implemented measures at retail facilities and mail processing facilities to ensure appropriate social distancing, including through signage, floor tape, and “cough/sneeze” barriers. We have also changed our delivery procedures to ensure the appropriate social distancing between our letter carriers and customers, such as by eliminating the customer signature requirement for certain deliveries. We are strongly encouraging the use of facial coverings in those environments where social distancing is difficult to maintain, and will continue to evaluate our policies in that regard in light of the evolving circumstances.

- Updated our cleaning policies to ensure that all cleaning in our facilities occurs in a manner consistent with CDC guidance relating to this pandemic.

- Expanded the use of telework for those employees who are able to perform their jobs remotely.

- Issued and continue to issue a daily cadence of communications to employees to ensure they have the latest information and guidance.

Keeping our customers safe. The CDC, the World Health Organization, as well as the U.S. Surgeon General have all said that there is very low risk that this virus is being spread through mail, which should be a comfort to the public. We are also adapting procedures to ensure that we are able to continue to provide service effectively and safely. As noted above, we are reinforcing workplace behaviors to ensure that contact between our employees and customers reflect the best guidance regarding healthy interactions, social distancing, and risk minimization. We are additionally taking steps to ensure that customers can safely come to our retail facilities, such as by limiting the number of individuals who can be in a lobby at any one time, and employing floor tape to ensure that customers waiting in line can maintain the appropriate distance from one another, and from the retail counter.

Network integrity/continuity of operations. The Postal Service is undertaking all reasonable measures to minimize impacts to our customers. Following our normal protocol, we began daily operational assessments and responses as the situation in China was first identified, and are coordinating organization-wide efforts to respond to evolving conditions, and to anticipate and prepare for customer and community needs throughout the country. We are highly confident in our ability to process and deliver the nation’s mail and packages throughout this emergency. We do not expect significant lasting disruption or degradation in the services we provide in the domestic market, though we do anticipate that adjusting local operations in certain areas may be necessary to account for absent employees and other local contingencies, and that such adjustments will likely have temporary service impacts. If, for some reason, we need to curtail or adjust operations in a particular facility or area, activation of localized continuity of operations plans will be implemented to provide required support – similar to planning we implement in the wake of hurricanes, flooding, wildfires and other disruptive events. In addition, given the impact of the pandemic on the availability of transportation, we have also been required to temporarily adjust our service standards for certain of our package products, and we have had to curtail operations to some foreign destinations where transportation is unavailable.

All-government emergency response. The Postal Service is playing an integral role in national emergency response and preparedness. The Postal Service is participating in the National Response Coordination Center (NRCC) headed by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), and will continue to assist FEMA and other agencies in the whole-of-government response to the pandemic. The Postal Service has unique capabilities in this regard, because of our role as the most frequent touchpoint between the American people and the federal government through our nationwide retail and delivery network. For instance, we have leveraged our network to communicate CDC guidance to the public, both by displaying CDC posters in our retail facilities, by providing key information through our digital message boards in our large Post Offices, and by working with the Administration to help design and deliver a postcard from the President to every American household that relayed the key CDC guidance and that informed the recipients about the CDC’s COVID-19 specific website.

Further, we have also donated and delivered 500,000 N-95 masks (which are different from the masks that our employees utilize) that were in excess of our needs to the Department of Health and Human Services for the Strategic National Stockpile for distribution to hospitals and other critical uses. Additionally, we are prepared to assist as necessary with the distribution of other personal protective equipment as a part of the Administration’s pandemic response. Finally, we will be delivering information concerning the stimulus checks that were provided as a part of the CARES Act, and we will also be delivering the physical checks to those who will not be receiving them through direct deposit.

Impact of the Pandemic on the Postal Service’s Financial Condition

While the criticality of the services the Postal Service provides has never been more evident, and we are committed to continuing to fulfill our essential universal service mission, the COVID-19 pandemic has also had drastic impacts on our financial condition. We have experienced significant and sudden declines in mail volume and revenue due to the pandemic. The result is a liquidity crisis that requires immediate action by Congress to ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term.

Our projections of the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic are grounded in three knowns and a significant number of unknowns. The three knowns include what is currently happening with mail volumes, the impact of the last recession (i.e., the Great Recession) on the Postal Service’s volume after GDP growth resumed, and what mailers are communicating to the Postal Service regarding their short-term plans.

The first known is what is currently happening with mail volumes. We are seeing a significant decline across mail products, with growth in packages. All percentages describe the change in mail volume from the same period last year. During the first week of the COVID-impact (March 16-March 21), the Postal Service saw total delivered mail volume (consisting of letters and flats) decline by 5.3%, and these declines have accelerated significantly since then, as follows:

- The week of March 22nd total delivered mail volume declined by 7.5%
- The week of March 29th total delivered mail volume declined by 24.2%
• The week of April 5th total delivered mail volume declined by 32.2%.
• UPDATE FOR ADDITIONAL WEEKS?

Delivered packages have shown a growth trajectory which has been offsetting a portion of the mail revenues lost in recent weeks. The first week of the COVID-impact (March 16-March 21), the Postal Service saw delivered package volume decline by 1.0%, but since then packages have grown significantly, as follows:
• The week of March 22nd total delivered package volume grew by 5.0%
• The week of March 29th total delivered package volume increased by 11.8%
• The week of April 5th total delivered package volume increased by 20.7%.
• UPDATE FOR ADDITIONAL WEEKS?

However, package growth cannot fully counteract the impact of the mail volume declines we are experiencing. In addition, although package growth has accelerated, our current projection is that this trend will not continue and we will likely have declines in packages in the upcoming months. The reasons for this belief are as follows:

• First, some of our customers are already expressing concerns about what they are reading concerning our financial condition and stability, and are pursuing alternatives to move and deliver their products.
• Second, the significant decline in GDP and the increase in the unemployment rate and the resulting decline in consumer income will likely lead to less consumer spending and a decline in the overall package market.
• Third, package growth will also be likely be impacted by supply chain disruptions across the system, as shortages due to production and transportation disruptions, not only in the U.S, but throughout the world, ripple through the economy, thus reducing package volume.
• Finally, much of the package growth seen in recent weeks was fueled by consumers stocking up on basic needed household items and stockpiling food. Much of this spending was funneled through e-commerce because consumers did not want to physically shop in stores. As consumers reach higher inventory levels of household staples, repeat purchasing will decline. Additionally, as society begins to open up, many (but not all) consumers will return to shopping in stores.

The known impacts experienced by the Postal Service during and after the last recession in 2008-2009 also influence our analysis. During the Great Recession, the Postal Service lost significant mail volume that never returned; total volumes experienced a steep downward step between 2007 and 2009 and thereafter returned to a more gradual decline that has continued ever since. Prior to the recession, the Postal Service had total mail volume of 212B pieces in FY2007. After the recession, the Postal Service had 168B pieces within the system in FY2011, a decline of 20.7% of total mail volume. Mail volume declined by 43.9B pieces and $9.2B in total revenue were lost during this period, with $6.8 billion of revenue lost in 2009 alone.

The final known factor is what mailers are telling us about their short-term plans. For the most part, major mailers are expecting a slow-down in mailing due to the economic impact across the economy. Advertisers have reduced spending, which is having a significant effect on marketing mail, with marketing mail volume down 42.5% in the most recent week.
There are three significant components to the COVID-19 impact that are unknown and make the effects of the pandemic on mail volumes extremely difficult to quantify:

- Depth of the short-term impact during Calendar Q2 and Q3. Specifically, how bad will economic conditions get?
- Duration of the economic impact. This is directly tied to how long the economy remains shuttered and will have a significant influence on FY2021 volumes and revenues.
- Volume levels to which mail returns after the pandemic is concluded. This will influence our financial outlook in future years. It is possible that many companies never return to business and that some portion of our volume will be permanently lost to digital alternatives. (As noted previously, after the Great Recession, a large portion of mail volume never returned and we suffered a permanent decline from FY2007 levels of over 20%).

Each of these components will ultimately be influenced by the degree to which GDP declines in the coming months, the increase in the unemployment rate and the persistence of higher unemployment levels, declines in business and consumer confidence and investment spending (which often significantly lag the beginning of an “official” recovery), and the timing of the reopening of segments of the economy. None of these elements are known or can be predicted with any real degree of certainty at this time. The estimates for GDP decline are diverse, with a recent survey of economists by the Wall Street Journal reporting a median decline in GDP of 26.5% in Postal Quarter 3 (April – June, 2020). In addition, the same survey of economists suggests a median projection for the unemployment rate by June 2020 of 13%. To put that GDP loss in perspective, the Great Recession caused a 3.3% decline in GDP in FY2009; the median decline in GDP projected for this quarter (April – September 2020) is 7 times worse than the worst quarter GDP experienced in the last recession.

These GDP and unemployment projections, when considered in light of the Postal Service’s financial results during the Great Recession, and the most recent volume decline information, have led us to the following initial estimates for the next 18 months, and for the longer-term:

- Short-term impact - Postal Q3 & Q4 (April – September)
  - We expect a significant short-term impact for the remainder of FY2020 due to the economic impact of COVID-19 which will cause projected declines of approximately 50% in volumes in Q3 and 57% in Q4, based on the speed at which volume has already declined, the GDP and unemployment projections estimated by economists and information communicated by mailers.
- Medium-term impact - Fiscal Year 2021 (October 2020 – September 2021)
  - As time moves forward and the economic lock-down begins to lessen, we project a gradual return of volumes beginning in Q1, FY 2021, to about 60% of the corresponding pre-COVID levels in Q1.
  - For the rest of FY 2021, we estimate that volumes will gradually return to about 74% of pre-COVID volume levels. As noted, current projections by economists suggest the economic impact of the pandemic will be worse than the Great Recession (when we permanently lost over 20% of volumes).
  - For the entirety of FY 2021, we estimate that total volume will be approximately 70% of pre-COVID volume levels.
- Long-term impact - Fiscal Year 2022 and beyond

1 WSJ Survey of Economists - https://www.wsj.com/graphics/econsurvey/
The longer-term projection suggests a return to a “new normal” of about 75% of pre-COVID volume levels, which is slightly worse than the last recession when we returned to a new normal of approximately 80% of pre-recession volumes. We then expect the long-term gradual secular volume declines that we were experiencing prior to the pandemic will resume for the next 10 years.

All of these volume assumptions are dependent on many facets of the COVID-19 disruption that are as yet unknown. For example, the longer the economic lock-down continues and more businesses are disrupted, the higher the likelihood that the level of volume return could be less than currently projected. Likewise, if the economic lock-down retreats in the coming weeks and businesses return to normal quickly, it is possible that the volume levels could be greater than these projections. Ultimately, given the significant uncertainty concerning these matters, our projections, while severe, should not be considered a worst case, because it is conceivable that the impact of COVID-19 on mail volumes could be even more dire than we are anticipating.

Based on these projections, it is expected that the Postal Service’s financial condition will worsen significantly compared to previous estimates. Our current projections, which are based upon the assumptions set forth herein, indicate that the Postal Service will be essentially illiquid in September 2020 if additional cash is not obtained (either through the additional $10B Treasury loan under the CARES Act, or alternative funding mechanisms). At that time, the Postal Service would have less than one payroll of cash remaining (payroll is ~$2B bi-weekly), with a negative cash balance projected for October, when the $1.5B workers’ compensation cash payment is due to the Department of Labor. While previous estimates put this date as early as June, this has been extended until September due to our ability to delay payment of employer Social Security taxes pursuant to the CARES Act (~$1.1B thru September 2020), and our ability to obtain an additional $3.4B from the Federal Financing Bank pursuant to a short-term note that was available to us under our existing statutory borrowing authority. A portion of this note ($400M) must be repaid by September 2020, while the remaining $3B must be repaid by April 2, 2021.

We are in discussions with the Treasury regarding the borrowing authority in the CARES Act, including the terms and conditions that would apply to such borrowing. We anticipate that this borrowing will be provided to us and that we will be required to borrow the full $10 billion that is available, for the reasons noted herein.

However, even with this additional $10B, the Postal Service will continue to face a liquidity crisis in the near-term. Over the next 18 months (to the end of the next fiscal year, September 2021), we project our net loss will increase by $22.8B versus previous projections as a direct result of the impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic. Based upon our current projections, we will run out of cash in April 2021 even if we secure the additional $10B in borrowing under the CARES Act. Finally, over the longer term (10 years), we project our net loss will increase by $54.3B versus previous projections, directly due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Postal Service will continue to take aggressive action to reduce expenses commensurate with these volume declines through overtime and overall workhour reductions, and curtailing of all travel and other discretionary spending. However, due to the impact of COVID-19 on employee availability, the fixity of our network, and the costs associated with the leave provisions of the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, our ability to significantly reduce expenses in the short-run is limited. For instance, any savings associated with reduced workhours are diminished because the new leave provisions of the Families First Coronavirus Relief Act have added additional costs to the Postal Service that are estimated to be approximately $600M-$900M, depending on how many of our employees suffer a qualifying condition related to COVID-19, and on how many of our employees have children and dependents out of school/daycare. Unlike other entities, these expenses are not reimbursable to the Postal Service under the statute. In addition, it is expected that additional supplies and cleaning services required due to COVID-19 could cost the Postal Service over $100M over the next 6 months.

Given the economic uncertainty underlying the pandemic, the Postal Service will continuously monitor and evaluate new information as it becomes available, including current mail volumes, announcements by governments concerning the opening of aspects of the economy, input from our mail and shipping customers, as well as economic projections for the broader economy. This new information will necessitate updates to our forecast and the Postal Service will incorporate on an ongoing basis any relevant new information as it becomes available to ensure we have the most updated assessment of the pandemic on our financial condition.

Legislative Relief Sought from Congress

There is an immediate need for Congress to give the Postal Service relief to address the direct impacts that the COVID-19 pandemic has had and will have on our financial condition, so that we can ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term. To address the impacts of the pandemic, we seek the following four items from Congress:

- $25B in funds to cover the estimated COVID-19 losses over the next two years;
- $25B in funds for modernization, to address the long-term undercapitalization of the Postal Service that has been exacerbated by the pandemic, which will help the Postal Service weather the longer term economic impacts to our business resulting from the pandemic and ensure that our critical infrastructure will be ready to support the Nation for current and future needs;
- Satisfaction of our $14.4B in outstanding debt to the Federal Financing Bank
- Unrestricted borrowing authority up to $25B, by consolidating our existing borrowing authority of $15B under Title 39 of the United States Code, and $10B under the CARES Act, based on streamlined procedures, and by eliminating the $3B annual borrowing limitation.

As noted above, we estimate that the impact of COVID-19 will increase our net losses over the next 18 months by approximately $23B. Our request for $25B is intended to cover these losses, with a small cushion to account for contingencies, and hence to ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term. In this regard, our projections are not the worst case that could happen: in fact, we are not sure where the bottom is in terms of volume declines. As a result, it is important to build in some cushion to help ensure we remain liquid.

The longer-term impact of COVID-19 is estimated at almost $55B. In particular, the severe impact that the pandemic will have on our cash flows over the longer-term, due to the permanent shift in volumes, will exacerbate the fact that we are severely undercapitalized, by requiring us to further defer critically important capital investments. Modernizing our operations and infrastructure, such as through the purchase of new delivery vehicles, automated mail processing equipment, and other capital investments, is essential to our ability to continue providing our vital services to the American people in a prompt, reliable, and efficient manner.
We therefore are requesting $25B to address the impact that the pandemic will have on our ability to modernize our critical operations infrastructure. This will not only have a direct benefit to the American people in terms of ensuring our ability to provide our services, but will also act as a stimulus to the economy as our Nation recovers from the pandemic, as these funds will be used to purchase goods from suppliers in the private sector.

Finally, eliminating our current debt and creating a streamlined borrowing process moving forward will give the Postal Service immediate financial relief, as well as critical flexibility to ensure our continued ability to operate in the short-term. We propose that future borrowings from Treasury or the Federal Financing Bank occur through the framework of the note purchase agreement through which we borrowed funds from Federal Financing Bank for the past two decades. The note purchase agreement provided a streamlined mechanism for such borrowings, and gives the Postal Service needed certainty as to its ability to readily access cash. In addition, the agreement sets forth reasonable and appropriate terms and conditions that protects the interests of both the Postal Service and Treasury.

While this immediate action by Congress is critical to ensuring that we can withstand the direct impacts of the pandemic in the near term, it is important to note that it will not resolve the fundamental problems with the Postal Service’s business model, or restore the Postal Service to longer-term financial stability. In fact, this short-term relief will only allow us to maintain operations until 2023, if provided in full.

The Postal Service operates under a statutory and regulatory structure that does not give us sufficient flexibility to reduce costs and increase revenue to meet the challenges of the secular decline in the use of the mail. The Board also believes that it is important that Congress eventually act to address these business model issues, to ensure that the Postal Service can be financially stable over the next 10 years, though to be clear this is not something we are seeking immediately. That said, within the next 12-18 months, the Board also recommends that Congress will need to enact financial reforms that give us greater pricing and product flexibility, as well as the ability to address our retiree health benefits program, which is not properly integrated with Medicare, and our unaffordable pension payment obligations. Absent such reforms, which we believe have broad support among postal stakeholders, it would be necessary for the Board to adopt more significant and controversial structural reforms to ensure our ability to survive over the next 10 years.

Conclusion

The lives of the American public have changed dramatically over the last several weeks, and it is during difficult times when the true value of the Postal Service to the nation is most evident. One of our strengths as an organization is our stabilizing role in a crisis: the American people take confidence from our regular, daily role in their community and in their lives. We are proud of the heroism shown by our employees during this pandemic, by their steadfast determination to continue working every day to provide our vital service to the American people. Our request to Congress for the short-term financial relief discussed in this letter is designed to ensure that we can continue to serve the essential needs of the American people as a part of the nation’s critical infrastructure.

Please let us know if you have any questions regarding this letter, and we look forward to continuing to work with you and the Administration in addressing the Postal Service’s financial challenges, and in preserving this great American institution.

Dear Representative/Senator ___,

We are writing to share with you the actions the United States Postal Service is taking to meet the needs of the American public and to protect our employees and customers as our nation responds to the Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic, and to also inform you of the serious impacts that the pandemic is having on the Postal Service's financial condition.

As you know, our Board is comprised of both Republicans and Democrats, and we take pride in operating in a very bipartisan manner. We thank President Trump for appointing, and the Senate for confirming, a Board whose members bring unique capabilities, diverse perspectives, and broad experiences, and who are all committed to putting personal politics aside to represent the public interest and to ensure that the Postal Service continues to provide its essential services for the American people, both today and in the years to come. Since taking office, the Board has worked extensively to craft a plan to address the Postal Service’s financial condition, a process that has taken on new urgency considering the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the Postal Service. The $10 billion of additional borrowing authority provided in the CARES Act is a good start, and we also thank the Administration and Congress for taking that important action. However, as detailed below, this additional authority is not sufficient to address the near-term liquidity crisis that the Postal Service is facing as a result of the pandemic, which requires Congress to take further immediate action to ensure our continued ability to provide our critical services. Below, we address our recommendations to Congress for both immediate and longer-term relief, which have been adopted unanimously by the Board.

The Board and Postal Service management team, along with the 630,000 employees of the Postal Service, remain highly focused on our mission of binding the nation together and providing the American people with prompt, reliable, and universal postal delivery services. Our mission has never been more important than now, as Americans shelter in place, work from home, or otherwise practice social distancing. We operate by statute as a “basic and fundamental service” provided by the Federal Government to the American people. In addition, the continued provision of postal services is designated as an essential function of the Government during times of emergency pursuant to the framework of the National Continuity Policy, and the postal sector is also designated by the Department of Homeland Security as part of the nation’s critical infrastructure. Six days per week, and in some instances seven, the men and women of the Postal Service accept, process, transport, and deliver important mail and vital packages, including important governmental information and benefits such as Census materials, social security and stimulus checks, and materials advising the public about COVID-19; materials relating to elections, including absentee ballots and political mail; materials that are essential to the functioning of our economy, such as transactional mail; and packages containing sustaining necessities, including medicines and other goods purchased online.

We are proud of the essential services that the Postal Service provides to the American people, and of the fact that the Postal Service consistently receives the highest public approval ratings
of any entity of the Federal Government. Indeed a recent survey by the Pew Research Center released on April 9 shows that an overwhelming 91 percent of respondents have a favorable view of USPS, and this favorable opinion is shared nearly equally by Republicans and Democrats alike. This standing with the American people is based in no small part on the Postal Service’s nonpartisan, nonpolitical and equalitarian nature. In that regard, you can be assured that the Board fully recognizes that it is vital to the achievement of the Postal Service’s mission that there is no actual or appearance of political bias or partiality on the part of the Postal Service. As such, we will be vigilant to ensure that the Postal Service does not endorse the political activities of any group, and we will continue to take appropriate legal and other actions to ensure that no group uses our trademarks or other intellectual property in connection with their political activities to suggest or infer that the Postal Service supports their political viewpoints. The Postal Service will remain politically neutral, nonpartisan, unbiased, and impartial, and we will not allow this great American institution to be misused as a part of the partisan political fray.

Postal Service Response to the Pandemic

The Board has also been holding meetings and briefings at regular intervals to receive the latest information and provide strategic direction to management on responding to the pandemic. We have established a dedicated COVID-19 Command Response leadership team to direct employee, operational, business, and customer continuity efforts during this extraordinary time. We are fully committed to being a source of consistency and reliability for American households and businesses throughout this national emergency, and to ensuring that the public can confidently depend upon our mailing and shipping services, both today and in the future. As we provide our vital service, we have been adjusting our policies and operating procedures in a manner consistent with the advice of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), and other public health officials.

In this regard, the specific measures we have implemented in response to the COVID-19 outbreak include the following:

Keeping our employees safe. The essential services we provide are only possible due to the collective and individual efforts of the dedicated public servants who work for the Postal Service. We are doing everything that we can to protect the health and safety of our employees while they are performing their jobs, in a manner consistent with the advice of medical and public health professionals. To achieve this goal, the COVID-19 Command Response team at Headquarters is working closely with HHS, CDC, and other public health officials to receive their latest guidance on appropriate workplace practices. We are adjusting our policies accordingly, and are continually sharing the latest information throughout our organization. Specific actions we have taken include the following:

- Updated our leave policies to allow liberal use of leave, and to therefore give our employees the ability to stay home whenever they feel sick, must provide dependent care, or wish to abide by State or local shelter-in-place requirements. We have been actively encouraging any employee who feels sick to stay home. To facilitate their ability to do so, we entered into MOUs even in advance of the Families First Coronavirus Response Act with our unions and management associations to provide 80 hours of paid leave to employees, including non-career employees, for issues related to COVID-19. We expanded the definition of Sick Leave for Dependent Care for all employees to deal with the cascading closures of primary and secondary schools across the country. While we have taken these steps on our own initiative, we have also ensured that employees

- Worked to overcome the challenges in the supply chain to ensure that our employees have ready access to hand sanitizer, and that they receive surgical masks and gloves upon request. This has been a matter of the highest priority for the Postal Service throughout the pandemic. We have shipped over 18 million masks throughout the country to ensure that they are available for our employees, and are working tirelessly to keep the supply chain for critical personal protective equipment flowing in the face of national challenges.

- Reinforced workplace behaviors to ensure that contact amongst our employees and with our customers reflects the best guidance regarding healthy interactions, social distancing, and risk minimization. We have implemented measures at retail facilities and mail processing facilities to ensure appropriate social distancing, including through signage, floor tape, and “cough/sneeze” barriers. We have also changed our delivery procedures to ensure the appropriate social distancing between our letter carriers and customers, such as by eliminating the customer signature requirement for certain deliveries. We are strongly encouraging the use of facial coverings in those environments where social distancing is difficult to maintain, and will continue to evaluate our policies in that regard in light of the evolving circumstances.

- Updated our cleaning policies to ensure that all cleaning in our facilities occurs in a manner consistent with CDC guidance relating to this pandemic.

- Expanded the use of telework for those employees who are able to perform their jobs remotely.

Keeping our customers safe. The CDC, the World Health Organization, as well as the U.S. Surgeon General have all said that there is very low risk that this virus is being spread through mail, which should be a comfort to the public. We are also adapting procedures to ensure that we are able to continue to provide service effectively and safely. As noted above, we are reinforcing workplace behaviors to ensure that contact between our employees and customers reflect the best guidance regarding healthy interactions, social distancing, and risk minimization. We are additionally taking steps to ensure that customers can safely come to our retail facilities, such as by limiting the number of individuals who can be in a lobby at any one time, and employing floor tape to ensure that customers waiting in line can maintain the appropriate distance from one another, and from the retail counter.

Network integrity/continuity of operations. The Postal Service is undertaking all reasonable measures to minimize impacts to our customers. Following our normal protocol, we began daily operational assessments and responses as the situation in China was first identified, and are coordinating organization-wide efforts to respond to evolving conditions, and to anticipate and prepare for customer and community needs throughout the country. We are highly confident in our ability to process and deliver the nation’s mail and packages throughout this emergency. We do not expect significant lasting disruption or degradation in the services we provide in the domestic market, though we do anticipate that adjusting local operations in certain areas may be necessary to account for absent employees and other local contingencies, and that such adjustments will likely have temporary service impacts. If, for some reason, we need to curtail or adjust operations in a particular facility or area, activation of localized continuity of operations plans will be implemented to provide required support – similar to planning we implement in the wake of hurricanes, flooding, wildfires and other disruptive events. In addition, given the impact of the pandemic on the availability of transportation, we have also been required to temporarily adjust our service standards for certain of our package products, and we have had to curtail operations to some foreign destinations where transportation is unavailable.

All-government emergency response. The Postal Service is playing an integral role in national emergency response and preparedness. The Postal Service is participating in the National Response Coordination Center (NRCC) headed by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), and will continue to assist FEMA and other agencies in the whole-of-government response to the pandemic. The Postal Service has unique capabilities in this regard, because of our role as the most frequent touchpoint between the American people and the federal government through our nationwide retail and delivery network. For instance, we have leveraged our network to communicate CDC guidance to the public, both by displaying CDC posters in our retail facilities, by providing key information through our digital message boards in our large Post Offices, and by working with the Administration to help design and deliver a postcard from the President to every American household that relayed the key CDC guidance and that informed the recipients about the CDC’s COVID-19 specific website.

Further, we have also donated and delivered 500,000 N-95 masks (which are different from the masks that our employees utilize) that were in excess of our needs to the Department of Health and Human Services for the Strategic National Stockpile for distribution to hospitals and other critical uses. Additionally, we are prepared to assist as necessary with the distribution of other personal protective equipment as a part of the Administration’s pandemic response. Finally, we will be delivering information concerning the stimulus checks that were provided as a part of the CARES Act, and we will also be delivering the physical checks to those who will not be receiving them through direct deposit.

While the criticality of the services the Postal Service provides has never been more evident, and we are committed to continuing to fulfill our essential universal service mission, the COVID-19 pandemic has also had drastic impacts on our financial condition. We have experienced significant and sudden declines in mail volume and revenue due to the pandemic. The result is a liquidity crisis that requires immediate action by Congress to ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term.

Our projections of the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic are grounded in three knowns and a significant number of unknowns. The three knowns include what is currently happening with mail volumes, the impact of the last recession (i.e., the Great Recession) on the Postal Service’s volume after GDP growth resumed, and what mailers are communicating to the Postal Service regarding their short-term plans.

The first known is what is currently happening with mail volumes. We are seeing a significant decline across mail products, with growth in packages. All percentages describe the change in mail volume from the same period last year. During the first week of the COVID-impact (March 16-March 21), the Postal Service saw total delivered mail volume (consisting of letters and flats) decline by 5.3%, and these declines have accelerated significantly since then, as follows:

- The week of March 22nd total delivered mail volume declined by 7.5%
- The week of March 29th total delivered mail volume declined by 24.2%
• The week of April 5th total delivered mail volume declined by 32.2%.

• UPDATE FOR ADDITIONAL WEEKS?

Delivered packages have shown a growth trajectory which has been offsetting a portion of the mail revenues lost in recent weeks. The first week of the COVID-impact (March 16-March 21), the Postal Service saw delivered package volume decline by 1.0%, but since then packages have grown significantly, as follows:

• The week of March 22nd total delivered package volume grew by 5.0%
• The week of March 29th total delivered package volume increased by 11.8%
• The week of April 5th total delivered package volume increased by 20.7%.

• UPDATE FOR ADDITIONAL WEEKS?

However, package growth cannot fully counteract the impact of the mail volume declines we are experiencing. In addition, although package growth has accelerated, our current projection is that this trend will not continue and we will likely have declines in packages in the upcoming months. The reasons for this belief are as follows:

• First, some of our customers are already expressing concerns about what they are reading concerning our financial condition and stability, and are pursuing alternatives to move and deliver their products.
• Second, the significant decline in GDP and the increase in the unemployment rate and the resulting decline in consumer income will likely lead to less consumer spending and a decline in the overall package market.
• Third, package growth will also be likely be impacted by supply chain disruptions across the system, as shortages due to production and transportation disruptions, not only in the U.S, but throughout the world, ripple through the economy, thus reducing package volume.
• Finally, much of the package growth seen in recent weeks was fueled by consumers stocking up on basic needed household items and stockpiling food. Much of this spending was funneled through e-commerce because consumers did not want to physically shop in stores. As consumers reach higher inventory levels of household staples, repeat purchasing will decline. Additionally, as society begins to open up, many (but not all) consumers will return to shopping in stores.

The known impacts experienced by the Postal Service during and after the last recession in 2008-2009 also influence our analysis. During the Great Recession, the Postal Service lost significant mail volume that never returned; total volumes experienced a steep downward step between 2007 and 2009 and thereafter returned to a more gradual decline that has continued ever since. Prior to the recession, the Postal Service had total mail volume of 212B pieces in FY2007. After the recession, the Postal Service had 168B pieces within the system in FY2011, a decline of 20.7% of total mail volume. Mail volume declined by 43.9B pieces and $9.2B in total revenue were lost during this period, with $6.8 billion of revenue lost in 2009 alone.

The final known factor is what mailers are telling us about their short-term plans. For the most part, major mailers are expecting a slow-down in mailing due to the economic impact across the economy. Advertisers have reduced spending, which is having a significant effect on marketing mail, with marketing mail volume down 42.5% in the most recent week.

There are three significant components to the COVID-19 impact that are unknown and make the effects of the pandemic on mail volumes extremely difficult to quantify:

- Depth of the short-term impact during Calendar Q2 and Q3. Specifically, how bad will economic conditions get?
- Duration of the economic impact. This is directly tied to how long the economy remains shuttered and will have a significant influence on FY2021 volumes and revenues.
- Volume levels to which mail returns after the pandemic is concluded. This will influence our financial outlook in future years. It is possible that many companies never return to business and that some portion of our volume will be permanently lost to digital alternatives. (As noted previously, after the Great Recession, a large portion of mail volume never returned and we suffered a permanent decline from FY2007 levels of over 20%).

Each of these components will ultimately be influenced by the degree to which GDP declines in the coming months, the increase in the unemployment rate and the persistence of higher unemployment levels, declines in business and consumer confidence and investment spending (which often significantly lag the beginning of an “official” recovery), and the timing of the reopening of segments of the economy. None of these elements are known or can be predicted with any real degree of certainty at this time. The estimates for GDP decline are diverse, with a recent survey of economists by the Wall Street Journal reporting a median decline in GDP of 26.5% in Postal Quarter 3 (April – June, 2020). In addition, the same survey of economists suggests a median projection for the unemployment rate by June 2020 of 13%. To put that GDP loss in perspective, the Great Recession caused a 3.3% decline in GDP in FY2009; the median decline in GDP projected for this quarter (April – September 2020) is 7 times worse than the worst quarter GDP experienced in the last recession.

These GDP and unemployment projections, when considered in light of the Postal Service’s financial results during the Great Recession, and the most recent volume decline information, have led us to the following initial estimates for the next 18 months, and for the longer-term:

- Short-term impact - Postal Q3 & Q4 (April – September)
  - We expect a significant short-term impact for the remainder of FY2020 due to the economic impact of COVID-19 which will cause projected declines of approximately 50% in volumes in Q3 and 57% in Q4, based on the speed at which volume has already declined, the GDP and unemployment projections estimated by economists and information communicated by mailers.

- Medium-term impact - Fiscal Year 2021 (October 2020 – September 2021)
  - As time moves forward and the economic lock-down begins to lessen, we project a gradual return of volumes beginning in Q1, FY 2021, to about 60% of the corresponding pre-COVID levels in Q1.
  - For the rest of FY 2021, we estimate that volumes will gradually return to about 74% of pre-COVID volume levels. As noted, current projections by economists suggest the economic impact of the pandemic will be worse than the Great Recession (when we permanently lost over 20% of volumes).
  - For the entirety of FY 2021, we estimate that total volume will be approximately 70% of pre-COVID volume levels.

- Long-term impact - Fiscal Year 2022 and beyond

1 WSJ Survey of Economists - https://www.wsj.com/graphics/econsurvey/
The longer-term projection suggests a return to a “new normal” of about 75% of pre-COVID volume levels, which is slightly worse than the last recession when we returned to a new normal of approximately 80% of pre-recession volumes. We then expect the long-term gradual secular volume declines that we were experiencing prior to the pandemic will resume for the next 10 years.

All of these volume assumptions are dependent on many facets of the COVID-19 disruption that are as yet unknown. For example, the longer the economic lock-down continues and more businesses are disrupted, the higher the likelihood that the level of volume return could be less than currently projected. Likewise, if the economic lock-down retreats in the coming weeks and businesses return to normal quickly, it is possible that the volume levels could be greater than these projections. Ultimately, given the significant uncertainty concerning these matters, our projections, while severe, should not be considered a worst case, because it is conceivable that the impact of COVID-19 on mail volumes could be even more dire than we are anticipating.

Based on these projections, it is expected that the Postal Service’s financial condition will worsen significantly compared to previous estimates. Our current projections, which are based upon the assumptions set forth herein, indicate that the Postal Service will be essentially illiquid in September 2020 if additional cash is not obtained (either through the additional $10B Treasury loan under the CARES Act, or alternative funding mechanisms). At that time, the Postal Service would have less than one payroll of cash remaining (payroll is ~$2B bi-weekly), with a negative cash balance projected for October, when the $1.5B workers’ compensation cash payment is due to the Department of Labor. While previous estimates put this date as early as June, this has been extended until September due to our ability to delay payment of employer Social Security taxes pursuant to the CARES Act (~$1.1B thru September 2020), and our ability to obtain an additional $3.4B from the Federal Financing Bank pursuant to a short-term note that was available to us under our existing statutory borrowing authority. A portion of this note ($400M) must be repaid by September 2020, while the remaining $3B must be repaid by April 2, 2021.

We are in discussions with the Treasury regarding the borrowing authority in the CARES Act, including the terms and conditions that would apply to such borrowing. We anticipate that this borrowing will be provided to us and that we will be required to borrow the full $10 billion that is available, for the reasons noted herein.

However, even with this additional $10B, the Postal Service will continue to face a liquidity crisis in the near-term. Over the next 18 months (to the end of the next fiscal year, September 2021), we project our net loss will increase by $22.8B versus previous projections as a direct result of the impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic. Based upon our current projections, we will run out of cash in April 2021 even if we secure the additional $10B in borrowing under the CARES Act. Finally, over the longer term (10 years), we project our net loss will increase by $54.3B versus previous projections, directly due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Postal Service will continue to take aggressive action to reduce expenses commensurate with these volume declines through overtime and overall workhour reductions, and curtailing of all travel and other discretionary spending. However, due to the impact of COVID-19 on employee availability, the fixity of our network, and the costs associated with the leave provisions of the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, our ability to significantly reduce expenses in the short-run is limited. For instance, any savings associated with reduced workhours are diminished because the new leave provisions of the Families First Coronavirus Relief Act have added additional costs to the Postal Service that are estimated to be approximately $600M-$900M, depending on how many of our employees suffer a qualifying condition related to COVID-19, and on how many of our employees have children and dependents out of school/daycare. Unlike other entities, these expenses are not reimbursable to the Postal Service under the statute. In addition, it is expected that additional supplies and cleaning services required due to COVID-19 could cost the Postal Service over $100M over the next 6 months.

Given the economic uncertainty underlying the pandemic, the Postal Service will continuously monitor and evaluate new information as it becomes available, including current mail volumes, announcements by governments concerning the opening of aspects of the economy, input from our mail and shipping customers, as well as economic projections for the broader economy. This new information will necessitate updates to our forecast and the Postal Service will incorporate on an ongoing basis any relevant new information as it becomes available to ensure we have the most updated assessment of the pandemic on our financial condition.

Legislative Relief Sought from Congress

There is an immediate need for Congress to give the Postal Service relief to address the direct impacts that the COVID-19 pandemic has had and will have on our financial condition, so that we can ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term. To address the impacts of the pandemic, we seek the following four items from Congress:

- $25B in funds to cover the estimated COVID-19 losses over the next two years;
- $25B in funds for modernization, to address the long-term undercapitalization of the Postal Service that has been exacerbated by the pandemic, which will help the Postal Service weather the longer term economic impacts to our business resulting from the pandemic and ensure that our critical infrastructure will be ready to support the Nation for current and future needs;
- Satisfaction of our $14.4B in outstanding debt to the Federal Financing Bank
- Unrestricted borrowing authority up to $25B, by consolidating our existing borrowing authority of $15B under Title 39 of the United States Code, and $10B under the CARES Act, based on streamlined procedures, and by eliminating the $3B annual borrowing limitation.

As noted above, we estimate that the impact of COVID-19 will increase our net losses over the next 18 months by approximately $23B. Our request for $25B is intended to cover these losses, with a small cushion to account for contingencies, and hence to ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term. In this regard, our projections are not the worst case that could happen: in fact, we are not sure where the bottom is in terms of volume declines. As a result, it is important to build in some cushion to help ensure we remain liquid.

The longer-term impact of COVID-19 is estimated at almost $55B. In particular, the severe impact that the pandemic will have on our cash flows over the longer-term, due to the permanent shift in volumes, will exacerbate the fact that we are severely undercapitalized, by requiring us to further defer critically important capital investments. Modernizing our operations and infrastructure, such as through the purchase of new delivery vehicles, automated mail processing equipment, and other capital investments, is essential to our ability to continue providing our vital services to the American people in a prompt, reliable, and efficient manner.
We therefore are requesting $25B to address the impact that the pandemic will have on our ability to modernize our critical operations infrastructure. This will not only have a direct benefit to the American people in terms of ensuring our ability to provide our services, but will also act as a stimulus to the economy as our Nation recovers from the pandemic, as these funds will be used to purchase goods from suppliers in the private sector.

Finally, eliminating our current debt and creating a streamlined borrowing process moving forward will give the Postal Service immediate financial relief, as well as critical flexibility to ensure our continued ability to operate in the short-term. We propose that future borrowings from Treasury or the Federal Financing Bank occur through the framework of the note purchase agreement through which we borrowed funds from Federal Financing Bank for the past two decades. The note purchase agreement provided a streamlined mechanism for such borrowings, and gives the Postal Service needed certainty as to its ability to readily access cash. In addition, the agreement sets forth reasonable and appropriate terms and conditions that protects the interests of both the Postal Service and Treasury.

While this immediate action by Congress is critical to ensuring that we can withstand the direct impacts of the pandemic in the near term, it is important to note that it will not resolve the fundamental problems with the Postal Service’s business model, or restore the Postal Service to longer-term financial stability. In fact, this short-term relief will only allow us to maintain operations until 2023, if provided in full.

The Postal Service operates under a statutory and regulatory structure that does not give us sufficient flexibility to reduce costs and increase revenue to meet the challenges of the secular decline in the use of the mail. The Board also believes that it is important that Congress eventually act to address these business model issues, to ensure that the Postal Service can be financially stable over the next 10 years, though to be clear this is not something we are seeking immediately. That said, within the next 12-18 months, the Board also recommends that Congress will need to enact financial reforms that give us greater pricing and product flexibility, as well as the ability to address our retiree health benefits program, which is not properly integrated with Medicare, and our unaffordable pension payment obligations. Absent such reforms, which we believe have broad support among postal stakeholders, it would be necessary for the Board to adopt more significant and controversial structural reforms to ensure our ability to survive over the next 10 years.

Conclusion

The lives of the American public have changed dramatically over the last several weeks, and it is during difficult times when the true value of the Postal Service to the nation is most evident. One of our strengths as an organization is our stabilizing role in a crisis: the American people take confidence from our regular, daily role in their community and in their lives. We are proud of the heroism shown by our employees during this pandemic, by their steadfast determination to continue working every day to provide our vital service to the American people. Our request to Congress for the short-term financial relief discussed in this letter is designed to ensure that we can continue to serve the essential needs of the American people as a part of the nation’s critical infrastructure.

Please let us know if you have any questions regarding this letter, and we look forward to continuing to work with you and the Administration in addressing the Postal Service’s financial challenges, and in preserving this great American institution.
ALL OTHER BOARD MEMBERS
DRAFT – BOG Chair Letter to Leadership re COVID-19 v10:

The Honorable _____

Dear Representative/Senator ___,

We are writing to share with you the actions the United States Postal Service is taking to meet the needs of the American public and to protect our employees and customers as our nation responds to the Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic, and to also inform you of the serious impacts that the pandemic is having on the Postal Service’s financial condition.

As you know, our Board is comprised of both Republicans and Democrats, and we take pride in operating in a very bipartisan manner. We thank President Trump for appointing, and the Senate for confirming, a Board whose members bring unique capabilities, diverse perspectives, and broad experiences, and who are all committed to putting personal politics aside to represent the public interest and to ensure that the Postal Service continues to provide its essential services for the American people, both today and in the years to come. Since taking office, the Board has worked extensively to craft a plan to address the Postal Service’s financial condition, a process that has taken on new urgency considering the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the Postal Service. The $10 billion of additional borrowing authority provided in the CARES Act is a good start, and we also thank the Administration and Congress for taking that important action. However, as detailed below, this additional authority is not sufficient to address the near-term liquidity crisis that the Postal Service is facing as a result of the pandemic, which requires Congress to take further immediate action to ensure our continued ability to provide our critical services. Below, we address our recommendations to Congress for both immediate and longer-term relief, which have been adopted unanimously by the Board.

The Board and Postal Service management team, along with the 630,000 employees of the Postal Service, remain highly focused on our mission of binding the nation together and providing the American people with prompt, reliable, and universal postal delivery services. Our mission has never been more important than now, as Americans shelter in place, work from home, or otherwise practice social distancing. We operate by statute as a “basic and fundamental service” provided by the Federal Government to the American people. In addition, the continued provision of postal services is designated as an essential function of the Government during times of emergency pursuant to the framework of the National Continuity Policy, and the postal sector is also designated by the Department of Homeland Security as part of the nation’s critical infrastructure. Six days per week, and in some instances seven, the men and women of the Postal Service accept, process, transport, and deliver important mail and vital packages, including important governmental information and benefits such as Census materials, social security and stimulus checks, and materials advising the public about COVID-19; materials relating to elections, including absentee ballots and political mail; materials that are essential to the functioning of our economy, such as transactional mail; and packages containing sustaining necessities, including medicines and other goods purchased online.

We are proud of the essential services that the Postal Service provides to the American people, and of the fact that the Postal Service consistently receives the highest public approval ratings
of any entity of the Federal Government. Indeed a recent survey by the Pew Research Center released on April 9 shows that an overwhelming 91 percent of respondents have a favorable view of USPS, and this favorable opinion is shared nearly equally by Republicans and Democrats alike. This standing with the American people is based in no small part on the Postal Service’s nonpartisan, nonpolitical and equalitarian nature. In that regard, you can be assured that the Board fully recognizes that it is vital to the achievement of the Postal Service’s mission that there is no actual or appearance of political bias or partiality on the part of the Postal Service. As such, we will be vigilant to ensure that the Postal Service does not endorse the political activities of any group, and we will continue to take appropriate legal and other actions to ensure that no group uses our trademarks or other intellectual property in connection with their political activities to suggest or infer that the Postal Service supports their political viewpoints. The Postal Service will remain neutral, nonpartisan, unbiased, and impartial, and we will not allow this great American institution to be misused as a part of the partisan political fray.

Postal Service Response to the Pandemic

The Board has also been holding meetings and briefings at regular intervals to receive the latest information and provide strategic direction to management on responding to the pandemic. We have established a dedicated COVID-19 Command Response leadership team to direct employee, operational, business, and customer continuity efforts during this extraordinary time. We are fully committed to being a source of consistency and reliability for American households and businesses throughout this national emergency, and to ensuring that the public can confidently depend upon our mailing and shipping services, both today and in the future. As we provide our vital service, we have been adjusting our policies and operating procedures in a manner consistent with the advice of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), and other public health officials.

In this regard, the specific measures we have implemented in response to the COVID-19 outbreak include the following:

Keeping our employees safe. The essential services we provide are only possible due to the collective and individual efforts of the dedicated public servants who work for the Postal Service. We are doing everything that we can to protect the health and safety of our employees while they are performing their jobs, in a manner consistent with the advice of medical and public health professionals. To achieve this goal, the COVID-19 Command Response team at Headquarters is working closely with HHS, CDC, and other public health officials to receive their latest guidance on appropriate workplace practices. We are adjusting our policies accordingly, and are continually sharing the latest information throughout our organization. Specific actions we have taken include the following:

- Updated our leave policies to allow liberal use of leave, and to therefore give our employees the ability to stay home whenever they feel sick, must provide dependent care, or wish to abide by State or local shelter-in-place requirements. We have been actively encouraging any employee who feels sick to stay home. To facilitate their ability to do so, we entered into MOUs even in advance of the Families First Coronavirus Response Act with our unions and management associations to provide 80 hours of paid leave to employees, including non-career employees, for issues related to COVID-19. We expanded the definition of Sick Leave for Dependent Care for all employees to deal with the cascading closures of primary and secondary schools across the country. While we have taken these steps on our own initiative, we have also ensured that employees will also receive the emergency leave authorized by the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, in addition to what they otherwise have accrued.

- Worked to overcome the challenges in the supply chain to ensure that our employees have ready access to hand sanitizer, and that they receive surgical masks and gloves upon request. This has been a matter of the highest priority for the Postal Service throughout the pandemic. We have shipped over 18 million masks throughout the country to ensure that they are available for our employees, and are working tirelessly to keep the supply chain for critical personal protective equipment flowing in the face of national challenges.

- Reinforced workplace behaviors to ensure that contact amongst our employees and with our customers reflects the best guidance regarding healthy interactions, social distancing, and risk minimization. We have implemented measures at retail facilities and mail processing facilities to ensure appropriate social distancing, including through signage, floor tape, and “cough/sneeze” barriers. We have also changed our delivery procedures to ensure the appropriate social distancing between our letter carriers and customers, such as by eliminating the customer signature requirement for certain deliveries. We are strongly encouraging the use of facial coverings in those environments where social distancing is difficult to maintain, and will continue to evaluate our policies in that regard in light of the evolving circumstances.

- Updated our cleaning policies to ensure that all cleaning in our facilities occurs in a manner consistent with CDC guidance relating to this pandemic.

- Expanded the use of telework for those employees who are able to perform their jobs remotely.

- Issued and continue to issue a daily cadence of communications to employees to ensure they have the latest information and guidance.

Keeping our customers safe. The CDC, the World Health Organization, as well as the U.S. Surgeon General have all said that there is very low risk that this virus is being spread through mail, which should be a comfort to the public. We are also adapting procedures to ensure that we are able to continue to provide service effectively and safely. As noted above, we are reinforcing workplace behaviors to ensure that contact between our employees and customers reflect the best guidance regarding healthy interactions, social distancing, and risk minimization. We are additionally taking steps to ensure that customers can safely come to our retail facilities, such as by limiting the number of individuals who can be in a lobby at any one time, and employing floor tape to ensure that customers waiting in line can maintain the appropriate distance from one another, and from the retail counter.

Network integrity/continuity of operations. The Postal Service is undertaking all reasonable measures to minimize impacts to our customers. Following our normal protocol, we began daily operational assessments and responses as the situation in China was first identified, and are coordinating organization-wide efforts to respond to evolving conditions, and to anticipate and prepare for customer and community needs throughout the country. We are highly confident in our ability to process and deliver the nation’s mail and packages throughout this emergency. We do not expect significant lasting disruption or degradation in the services we provide in the domestic market, though we do anticipate that adjusting local operations in certain areas may be necessary to account for absent employees and other local contingencies, and that such adjustments will likely have temporary service impacts. If, for some reason, we need to curtail or adjust operations in a particular facility or area, activation of localized continuity of operations plans will be implemented to provide required support – similar to planning we implement in the wake of hurricanes, flooding, wildfires and other disruptive events. In addition, given the impact of the pandemic on the availability of transportation, we have also been required to temporarily adjust our service standards for certain of our package products, and we have had to curtail operations to some foreign destinations where transportation is unavailable.

All-government emergency response. The Postal Service is playing an integral role in national emergency response and preparedness. The Postal Service is participating in the National Response Coordination Center (NRCC) headed by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), and will continue to assist FEMA and other agencies in the whole-of-government response to the pandemic. The Postal Service has unique capabilities in this regard, because of our role as the most frequent touchpoint between the American people and the federal government through our nationwide retail and delivery network. For instance, we have leveraged our network to communicate CDC guidance to the public, both by displaying CDC posters in our retail facilities, by providing key information through our digital message boards in our large Post Offices, and by working with the Administration to help design and deliver a postcard from the President to every American household that relayed the key CDC guidance and that informed the recipients about the CDC’s COVID-19 specific website.

Further, we have also donated and delivered 500,000 N-95 masks (which are different from the masks that our employees utilize) that were in excess of our needs to the Department of Health and Human Services for the Strategic National Stockpile for distribution to hospitals and other critical uses. Additionally, we are prepared to assist as necessary with the distribution of other personal protective equipment as a part of the Administration’s pandemic response. Finally, we will be delivering information concerning the stimulus checks that were provided as a part of the CARES Act, and we will also be delivering the physical checks to those who will not be receiving them through direct deposit.

Impact of the Pandemic on the Postal Service’s Financial Condition

While the criticality of the services the Postal Service provides has never been more evident, and we are committed to continuing to fulfill our essential universal service mission, the COVID-19 pandemic has also had drastic impacts on our financial condition. We have experienced significant and sudden declines in mail volume and revenue due to the pandemic. The result is a liquidity crisis that requires immediate action by Congress to ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term.

Our projections of the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic are grounded in three knowns and a significant number of unknowns. The three knowns include what is currently happening with mail volumes, the impact of the last recession (i.e., the Great Recession) on the Postal Service’s volume after GDP growth resumed, and what mailers are communicating to the Postal Service regarding their short-term plans.

The first known is what is currently happening with mail volumes. We are seeing a significant decline across mail products, with growth in packages. All percentages describe the change in mail volume from the same period last year. During the first week of the COVID-impact (March 16-March 21), the Postal Service saw total delivered mail volume (consisting of letters and flats) decline by 5.3%, and these declines have accelerated significantly since then, as follows:

- The week of March 22nd total delivered mail volume declined by 7.5%
- The week of March 29th total delivered mail volume declined by 24.2%
The week of April 5th total delivered mail volume declined by 32.2%.

Delivered packages have shown a growth trajectory which has been offsetting a portion of the mail revenues lost in recent weeks. The first week of the COVID-impact (March 16-March 21), the Postal Service saw delivered package volume decline by 1.0%, but since then packages have grown significantly, as follows:

- The week of March 22nd total delivered package volume grew by 5.0%
- The week of March 29th total delivered package volume increased by 11.8%
- The week of April 5th total delivered package volume increased by 20.7%.

However, package growth cannot fully counteract the impact of the mail volume declines we are experiencing. In addition, although package growth has accelerated, our current projection is that this trend will not continue and we will likely have declines in packages in the upcoming months. The reasons for this belief are as follows:

- First, some of our customers are already expressing concerns about what they are reading concerning our financial condition and stability, and are pursuing alternatives to move and deliver their products.
- Second, the significant decline in GDP and the increase in the unemployment rate and the resulting decline in consumer income will likely lead to less consumer spending and a decline in the overall package market.
- Third, package growth will also be likely be impacted by supply chain disruptions across the system, as shortages due to production and transportation disruptions, not only in the U.S, but throughout the world, ripple through the economy, thus reducing package volume.
- Finally, much of the package growth seen in recent weeks was fueled by consumers stocking up on basic needed household items and stockpiling food. Much of this spending was funneled through e-commerce because consumers did not want to physically shop in stores. As consumers reach higher inventory levels of household staples, repeat purchasing will decline. Additionally, as society begins to open up, many (but not all) consumers will return to shopping in stores.

The known impacts experienced by the Postal Service during and after the last recession in 2008-2009 also influence our analysis. During the Great Recession, the Postal Service lost significant mail volume that never returned; total volumes experienced a steep downward step between 2007 and 2009 and thereafter returned to a more gradual decline that has continued ever since. Prior to the recession, the Postal Service had total mail volume of 212B pieces in FY2007. After the recession, the Postal Service had 168B pieces within the system in FY2011, a decline of 20.7% of total mail volume. Mail volume declined by 43.9B pieces and $9.2B in total revenue were lost during this period, with $6.8 billion of revenue lost in 2009 alone.

The final known factor is what mailers are telling us about their short-term plans. For the most part, major mailers are expecting a slow-down in mailing due to the economic impact across the economy. Advertisers have reduced spending, which is having a significant effect on marketing mail, with marketing mail volume down 42.5% in the most recent week.
There are three significant components to the COVID-19 impact that are unknown and make the effects of the pandemic on mail volumes extremely difficult to quantify:

- Depth of the short-term impact during Calendar Q2 and Q3. Specifically, how bad will economic conditions get?

- Duration of the economic impact. This is directly tied to how long the economy remains shuttered and will have a significant influence on FY2021 volumes and revenues.

- Volume levels to which mail returns after the pandemic is concluded. This will influence our financial outlook in future years. It is possible that many companies never return to business and that some portion of our volume will be permanently lost to digital alternatives. (As noted previously, after the Great Recession, a large portion of mail volume never returned and we suffered a permanent decline from FY2007 levels of over 20%).

Each of these components will ultimately be influenced by the degree to which GDP declines in the coming months, the increase in the unemployment rate and the persistence of higher unemployment levels, declines in business and consumer confidence and investment spending (which often significantly lag the beginning of an “official” recovery), and the timing of the reopening of segments of the economy. None of these elements are known or can be predicted with any real degree of certainty at this time. The estimates for GDP decline are diverse, with a recent survey of economists by the Wall Street Journal reporting a median decline in GDP of 26.5% in Postal Quarter 3 (April – June, 2020).\(^1\) In addition, the same survey of economists suggests a median projection for the unemployment rate by June 2020 of 13%. To put that GDP loss in perspective, the Great Recession caused a 3.3% decline in GDP in FY2009; the median decline in GDP projected for this quarter (April – September 2020) is 7 times worse than the worst quarter GDP experienced in the last recession.

These GDP and unemployment projections, when considered in light of the Postal Service’s financial results during the Great Recession, and the most recent volume decline information, have led us to the following initial estimates for the next 18 months, and for the longer-term:

- Short-term impact - Postal Q3 & Q4 (April – September)
  - We expect a significant short-term impact for the remainder of FY2020 due to the economic impact of COVID-19 which will cause projected declines of approximately 50% in volumes in Q3 and 57% in Q4, based on the speed at which volume has already declined, the GDP and unemployment projections estimated by economists and information communicated by mailers.

- Medium-term impact - Fiscal Year 2021 (October 2020 – September 2021)
  - As time moves forward and the economic lock-down begins to lessen, we project a gradual return of volumes beginning in Q1, FY 2021, to about 60% of the corresponding pre-COVID levels in Q1.
  - For the rest of FY 2021, we estimate that volumes will gradually return to about 74% of pre-COVID volume levels. As noted, current projections by economists suggest the economic impact of the pandemic will be worse than the Great Recession (when we permanently lost over 20% of volumes).
  - For the entirety of FY 2021, we estimate that total volume will be approximately 70% of pre-COVID volume levels.

- Long-term impact - Fiscal Year 2022 and beyond

\(^1\) WSJ Survey of Economists - https://www.wsj.com/graphics/econsurvey/
The longer-term projection suggests a return to a “new normal” of about 75% of pre-COVID volume levels, which is slightly worse than the last recession when we returned to a new normal of approximately 80% of pre-recession volumes. We then expect the long-term gradual secular volume declines that we were experiencing prior to the pandemic will resume for the next 10 years.

All of these volume assumptions are dependent on many facets of the COVID-19 disruption that are as yet unknown. For example, the longer the economic lock-down continues and more businesses are disrupted, the higher the likelihood that the level of volume return could be less than currently projected. Likewise, if the economic lock-down retreats in the coming weeks and businesses return to normal quickly, it is possible that the volume levels could be greater than these projections. Ultimately, given the significant uncertainty concerning these matters, our projections, while severe, should not be considered a worst case, because it is conceivable that the impact of COVID-19 on mail volumes could be even more dire than we are anticipating.

Based on these projections, it is expected that the Postal Service’s financial condition will worsen significantly compared to previous estimates. Our current projections, which are based upon the assumptions set forth herein, indicate that the Postal Service will be essentially illiquid in September 2020 if additional cash is not obtained (either through the additional $10B Treasury loan under the CARES Act, or alternative funding mechanisms). At that time, the Postal Service would have less than one payroll of cash remaining (payroll is ~$2B bi-weekly), with a negative cash balance projected for October, when the $1.5B workers’ compensation cash payment is due to the Department of Labor. While previous estimates put this date as early as June, this has been extended until September due to our ability to delay payment of employer Social Security taxes pursuant to the CARES Act (~$1.1B thru September 2020), and our ability to obtain an additional $3.4B from the Federal Financing Bank pursuant to a short-term note that was available to us under our existing statutory borrowing authority. A portion of this note ($400M) must be repaid by September 2020, while the remaining $3B must be repaid by April 2, 2021.

We are in discussions with the Treasury regarding the borrowing authority in the CARES Act, including the terms and conditions that would apply to such borrowing. We anticipate that this borrowing will be provided to us and that we will be required to borrow the full $10 billion that is available, for the reasons noted herein.

However, even with this additional $10B, the Postal Service will continue to face a liquidity crisis in the near-term. Over the next 18 months (to the end of the next fiscal year, September 2021), we project our net loss will increase by $22.8B versus previous projections as a direct result of the impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic. Based upon our current projections, we will run out of cash in April 2021 even if we secure the additional $10B in borrowing under the CARES Act. Finally, over the longer term (10 years), we project our net loss will increase by $54.3B versus previous projections, directly due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Postal Service will continue to take aggressive action to reduce expenses commensurate with these volume declines through overtime and overall workhour reductions, and curtailing of all travel and other discretionary spending. However, due to the impact of COVID-19 on employee availability, the fixity of our network, and the costs associated with the leave provisions of the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, our ability to significantly reduce expenses in the short-run is limited. For instance, any savings associated with reduced workhours are diminished because the new leave provisions of the Families First Coronavirus Relief Act have added additional costs to the Postal Service that are estimated to be approximately $600M-$900M, depending on how many of our employees suffer a qualifying condition related to COVID-19, and on how many of our employees have children and dependents out of school/daycare. Unlike other entities, these expenses are not reimbursable to the Postal Service under the statute. In addition, it is expected that additional supplies and cleaning services required due to COVID-19 could cost the Postal Service over $100M over the next 6 months.

Given the economic uncertainty underlying the pandemic, the Postal Service will continuously monitor and evaluate new information as it becomes available, including current mail volumes, announcements by governments concerning the opening of aspects of the economy, input from our mail and shipping customers, as well as economic projections for the broader economy. This new information will necessitate updates to our forecast and the Postal Service will incorporate on an ongoing basis any relevant new information as it becomes available to ensure we have the most updated assessment of the pandemic on our financial condition.

Legislative Relief Sought from Congress

There is an immediate need for Congress to give the Postal Service relief to address the direct impacts that the COVID-19 pandemic has had and will have on our financial condition, so that we can ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term. To address the impacts of the pandemic, we seek the following four items from Congress:

- $25B in funds to cover the estimated COVID-19 losses over the next two years;
- $25B in funds for modernization, to address the long-term undercapitalization of the Postal Service that has been exacerbated by the pandemic, which will help the Postal Service weather the longer term economic impacts to our business resulting from the pandemic and ensure that our critical infrastructure will be ready to support the Nation for current and future needs;
- Satisfaction of our $14.4B in outstanding debt to the Federal Financing Bank
- Unrestricted borrowing authority up to $25B, by consolidating our existing borrowing authority of $15B under Title 39 of the United States Code, and $10B under the CARES Act, based on streamlined procedures, and by eliminating the $3B annual borrowing limitation.

As noted above, we estimate that the impact of COVID-19 will increase our net losses over the next 18 months by approximately $23B. Our request for $25B is intended to cover these losses, with a small cushion to account for contingencies, and hence to ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term. In this regard, our projections are not the worst case that could happen: in fact, we are not sure where the bottom is in terms of volume declines. As a result, it is important to build in some cushion to help ensure we remain liquid.

The longer-term impact of COVID-19 is estimated at almost $55B. In particular, the severe impact that the pandemic will have on our cash flows over the longer-term, due to the permanent shift in volumes, will exacerbate the fact that we are severely undercapitalized, by requiring us to further defer critically important capital investments. Modernizing our operations and infrastructure, such as through the purchase of new delivery vehicles, automated mail processing equipment, and other capital investments, is essential to our ability to continue providing our vital services to the American people in a prompt, reliable, and efficient manner.
We therefore are requesting $25B to address the impact that the pandemic will have on our ability to modernize our critical operations infrastructure. This will not only have a direct benefit to the American people in terms of ensuring our ability to provide our services, but will also act as a stimulus to the economy as our Nation recovers from the pandemic, as these funds will be used to purchase goods from suppliers in the private sector.

Finally, eliminating our current debt and creating a streamlined borrowing process moving forward will give the Postal Service immediate financial relief, as well as critical flexibility to ensure our continued ability to operate in the short-term. We propose that future borrowings from Treasury or the Federal Financing Bank occur through the framework of the note purchase agreement through which we borrowed funds from Federal Financing Bank for the past two decades. The note purchase agreement provided a streamlined mechanism for such borrowings, and gives the Postal Service needed certainty as to its ability to readily access cash. In addition, the agreement sets forth reasonable and appropriate terms and conditions that protects the interests of both the Postal Service and Treasury.

While this immediate action by Congress is critical to ensuring that we can withstand the direct impacts of the pandemic in the near term, it is important to note that it will not resolve the fundamental problems with the Postal Service’s business model, or restore the Postal Service to longer-term financial stability. In fact, this short-term relief will only allow us to maintain operations until 2023, if provided in full.

The Postal Service operates under a statutory and regulatory structure that does not give us sufficient flexibility to reduce costs and increase revenue to meet the challenges of the secular decline in the use of the mail. The Board also believes that it is important that Congress eventually act to address these business model issues, to ensure that the Postal Service can be financially stable over the next 10 years, though to be clear this is not something we are seeking immediately. That said, within the next 12-18 months, the Board also recommends that Congress will need to enact financial reforms that give us greater pricing and product flexibility, as well as the ability to address our retiree health benefits program, which is not properly integrated with Medicare, and our unaffordable pension payment obligations. Absent such reforms, which we believe have broad support among postal stakeholders, it would be necessary for the Board to adopt more significant and controversial structural reforms to ensure our ability to survive over the next 10 years.

Conclusion

The lives of the American public have changed dramatically over the last several weeks, and it is during difficult times when the true value of the Postal Service to the nation is most evident. One of our strengths as an organization is our stabilizing role in a crisis: the American people take confidence from our regular, daily role in their community and in their lives. We are proud of the heroism shown by our employees during this pandemic, by their steadfast determination to continue working every day to provide our vital service to the American people. Our request to Congress for the short-term financial relief discussed in this letter is designed to ensure that we can continue to serve the essential needs of the American people as a part of the nation’s critical infrastructure.

Please let us know if you have any questions regarding this letter, and we look forward to continuing to work with you and the Administration in addressing the Postal Service’s financial challenges, and in preserving this great American institution.
ALL OTHER BOARD MEMBERS
Dear Representative/Senator ___.

We are writing to share with you the actions the United States Postal Service is taking to meet the needs of the American public and to protect our employees and customers as our nation responds to the Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic, and to also inform you of the serious impacts that the pandemic is having on the Postal Service’s financial condition.

As you know, our Board is comprised of both Republicans and Democrats, and we take pride in operating in a very bipartisan manner. We thank President Trump for appointing, and the Senate for confirming, a Board whose members bring unique capabilities, diverse perspectives, and broad experiences, and who are all committed to putting personal politics aside to represent the public interest and to ensure that the Postal Service continues to provide its essential services for the American people, both today and in the years to come. Since taking office, the Board has worked extensively to craft a plan to address the Postal Service’s financial condition, a process that has taken on new urgency considering the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the Postal Service. The $10 billion of additional borrowing authority provided in the CARES Act is a good start, and we also thank the Administration and Congress for taking that important action. However, as detailed below, this additional authority is not sufficient to address the near-term liquidity crisis that the Postal Service is facing as a result of the pandemic, which requires Congress to take further immediate action to ensure our continued ability to provide our critical services. Below, we address our recommendations to Congress for both immediate and longer-term relief, which have been adopted unanimously by the Board.

The Board and Postal Service management team, along with the 630,000 employees of the Postal Service, remain highly focused on our mission of binding the nation together and providing the American people with prompt, reliable, and universal postal delivery services. Our mission has never been more important than now, as Americans shelter in place, work from home, or otherwise practice social distancing. We operate by statute as a “basic and fundamental service” provided by the Federal Government to the American people. In addition, the continued provision of postal services is designated as an essential function of the Government during times of emergency pursuant to the framework of the National Continuity Policy, and the postal sector is also designated by the Department of Homeland Security as part of the nation’s critical infrastructure. Six days per week, and in some instances seven, the men and women of the Postal Service accept, process, transport, and deliver important mail and vital packages, including important governmental information and benefits such as Census materials, social security and stimulus checks, and materials advising the public about COVID-19; materials relating to elections, including absentee ballots and political mail; materials that are essential to the functioning of our economy, such as transactional mail; and packages containing sustaining necessities, including medicines and other goods purchased online.

We are proud of the essential services that the Postal Service provides to the American people, and of the fact that the Postal Service consistently receives the highest public approval ratings...
of any entity of the Federal Government. Indeed a recent survey by the Pew Research Center released on April 9 shows that an overwhelming 91 percent of respondents have a favorable view of USPS, and this favorable opinion is shared nearly equally by Republicans and Democrats alike. This standing with the American people is based in no small part on the Postal Service’s nonpartisan, nonpolitical and equalitarian nature. In that regard, you can be assured that the Board fully recognizes that it is vital to the achievement of the Postal Service’s mission that there is no actual or appearance of political bias or partiality on the part of the Postal Service. As such, we will be vigilant to ensure that the Postal Service does not endorse the political activities of any group, and we will continue to take appropriate legal and other actions to ensure that no group uses our trademarks or other intellectual property in connection with their political activities to suggest or infer that the Postal Service supports their political viewpoints. The Postal Service will remain politically neutral, nonpartisan, unbiased, and impartial, and we will not allow this great American institution to be misused as a part of the partisan political fray.

Postal Service Response to the Pandemic

The Board has also been holding meetings and briefings at regular intervals to receive the latest information and provide strategic direction to management on responding to the pandemic. We have established a dedicated COVID-19 Command Response leadership team to direct employee, operational, business, and customer continuity efforts during this extraordinary time. We are fully committed to being a source of consistency and reliability for American households and businesses throughout this national emergency, and to ensuring that the public can confidently depend upon our mailing and shipping services, both today and in the future. As we provide our vital service, we have been adjusting our policies and operating procedures in a manner consistent with the advice of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), and other public health officials.

In this regard, the specific measures we have implemented in response to the COVID-19 outbreak include the following:

Keeping our employees safe. The essential services we provide are only possible due to the collective and individual efforts of the dedicated public servants who work for the Postal Service. We are doing everything that we can to protect the health and safety of our employees while they are performing their jobs, in a manner consistent with the advice of medical and public health professionals. To achieve this goal, the COVID-19 Command Response team at Headquarters is working closely with HHS, CDC, and other public health officials to receive their latest guidance on appropriate workplace practices. We are adjusting our policies accordingly, and are continually sharing the latest information throughout our organization. Specific actions we have taken include the following:

- Updated our leave policies to allow liberal use of leave, and to therefore give our employees the ability to stay home whenever they feel sick, must provide dependent care, or wish to abide by State or local shelter-in-place requirements. We have been actively encouraging any employee who feels sick to stay home. To facilitate their ability to do so, we entered into MOUs even in advance of the Families First Coronavirus Response Act with our unions and management associations to provide 80 hours of paid leave to employees, including non-career employees, for issues related to COVID-19. We expanded the definition of Sick Leave for Dependent Care for all employees to deal with the cascading closures of primary and secondary schools across the country. While we have taken these steps on our own initiative, we have also ensured that employees will also receive the emergency leave authorized by the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, in addition to what they otherwise have accrued.

• Worked to overcome the challenges in the supply chain to ensure that our employees have ready access to hand sanitizer, and that they receive surgical masks and gloves upon request. This has been a matter of the highest priority for the Postal Service throughout the pandemic. We have shipped over 18 million masks throughout the country to ensure that they are available for our employees, and are working tirelessly to keep the supply chain for critical personal protective equipment flowing in the face of national challenges.

• Reinforced workplace behaviors to ensure that contact amongst our employees and with our customers reflects the best guidance regarding healthy interactions, social distancing, and risk minimization. We have implemented measures at retail facilities and mail processing facilities to ensure appropriate social distancing, including through signage, floor tape, and “cough/sneeze” barriers. We have also changed our delivery procedures to ensure the appropriate social distancing between our letter carriers and customers, such as by eliminating the customer signature requirement for certain deliveries. We are strongly encouraging the use of facial coverings in those environments where social distancing is difficult to maintain, and will continue to evaluate our policies in that regard in light of the evolving circumstances.

• Updated our cleaning policies to ensure that all cleaning in our facilities occurs in a manner consistent with CDC guidance relating to this pandemic.

• Expanded the use of telework for those employees who are able to perform their jobs remotely.

• Issued and continue to issue a daily cadence of communications to employees to ensure they have the latest information and guidance.

Keeping our customers safe. The CDC, the World Health Organization, as well as the U.S.
Surgeon General have all said that there is very low risk that this virus is being spread through mail, which should be a comfort to the public. We are also adapting procedures to ensure that we are able to continue to provide service effectively and safely. As noted above, we are reinforcing workplace behaviors to ensure that contact between our employees and customers reflect the best guidance regarding healthy interactions, social distancing, and risk minimization.
We are additionally taking steps to ensure that customers can safely come to our retail facilities, such as by limiting the number of individuals who can be in a lobby at any one time, and employing floor tape to ensure that customers waiting in line can maintain the appropriate distance from one another, and from the retail counter.

Network integrity/continuity of operations. The Postal Service is undertaking all reasonable measures to minimize impacts to our customers. Following our normal protocol, we began daily operational assessments and responses as the situation in China was first identified, and are coordinating organization-wide efforts to respond to evolving conditions, and to anticipate and prepare for customer and community needs throughout the country. We are highly confident in our ability to process and deliver the nation’s mail and packages throughout this emergency.
We do not expect significant lasting disruption or degradation in the services we provide in the domestic market, though we do anticipate that adjusting local operations in certain areas may be necessary to account for absent employees and other local contingencies, and that such
adjustments will likely have temporary service impacts. If, for some reason, we need to curtail or adjust operations in a particular facility or area, activation of localized continuity of operations plans will be implemented to provide required support—similar to planning we implement in the wake of hurricanes, flooding, wildfires and other disruptive events. In addition, given the impact of the pandemic on the availability of transportation, we have also been required to temporarily adjust our service standards for certain of our package products, and we have had to curtail operations to some foreign destinations where transportation is unavailable.

All-government emergency response. The Postal Service is playing an integral role in national emergency response and preparedness. The Postal Service is participating in the National Response Coordination Center (NRCC) headed by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), and will continue to assist FEMA and other agencies in the whole-of-government response to the pandemic. The Postal Service has unique capabilities in this regard, because of our role as the most frequent touchpoint between the American people and the federal government through our nationwide retail and delivery network. For instance, we have leveraged our network to communicate CDC guidance to the public, both by displaying CDC posters in our retail facilities, by providing key information through our digital message boards in our large Post Offices, and by working with the Administration to help design and deliver a postcard from the President to every American household that relayed the key CDC guidance and that informed the recipients about the CDC’s COVID-19 specific website.

Further, we have also donated and delivered 500,000 N-95 masks (which are different from the masks that our employees utilize) that were in excess of our needs to the Department of Health and Human Services for the Strategic National Stockpile for distribution to hospitals and other critical uses. Additionally, we are prepared to assist as necessary with the distribution of other personal protective equipment as a part of the Administration’s pandemic response. Finally, we will be delivering information concerning the stimulus checks that were provided as a part of the CARES Act, and we will also be delivering the physical checks to those who will not be receiving them through direct deposit.

Impact of the Pandemic on the Postal Service’s Financial Condition

While the criticality of the services the Postal Service provides has never been more evident, and we are committed to continuing to fulfill our essential universal service mission, the COVID-19 pandemic has also had drastic impacts on our financial condition. We have experienced significant and sudden declines in mail volume and revenue due to the pandemic. The result is a liquidity crisis that requires immediate action by Congress to ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term.

Our projections of the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic are grounded in three knowns and a significant number of unknowns. The three knowns include what is currently happening with mail volumes, the impact of the last recession (i.e., the Great Recession) on the Postal Service’s volume after GDP growth resumed, and what mailers are communicating to the Postal Service regarding their short-term plans.

The first known is what is currently happening with mail volumes. We are seeing a significant decline across mail products, with growth in packages. All percentages describe the change in mail volume from the same period last year. During the first week of the COVID-impact (March 16-March 21), the Postal Service saw total delivered mail volume (consisting of letters and flats) decline by 5.3%, and these declines have accelerated significantly since then, as follows:

• The week of March 22nd total delivered mail volume declined by 7.5%
• The week of March 29th total delivered mail volume declined by 24.2%
• The week of April 5th total delivered mail volume declined by 32.2%.

UPDATE FOR ADDITIONAL WEEKS?

Delivered packages have shown a growth trajectory which has been offsetting a portion of the mail revenues lost in recent weeks. The first week of the COVID-impact (March 16-March 21), the Postal Service saw delivered package volume decline by 1.0%, but since then packages have grown significantly, as follows:

• The week of March 22nd total delivered package volume grew by 5.0%
• The week of March 29th total delivered package volume increased by 11.8%
• The week of April 5th total delivered package volume increased by 20.7%.

UPDATE FOR ADDITIONAL WEEKS?

However, package growth cannot fully counteract the impact of the mail volume declines we are experiencing. In addition, although package growth has accelerated, our current projection is that this trend will not continue and we will likely have declines in packages in the upcoming months. The reasons for this belief are as follows:

• First, some of our customers are already expressing concerns about what they are reading concerning our financial condition and stability, and are pursuing alternatives to move and deliver their products.
• Second, the significant decline in GDP and the increase in the unemployment rate and the resulting decline in consumer income will likely lead to less consumer spending and a decline in the overall package market.
• Third, package growth will also be likely be impacted by supply chain disruptions across the system, as shortages due to production and transportation disruptions, not only in the U.S, but throughout the world, ripple through the economy, thus reducing package volume.
• Finally, much of the package growth seen in recent weeks was fueled by consumers stocking up on basic needed household items and stockpiling food. Much of this spending was funneled through e-commerce because consumers did not want to physically shop in stores. As consumers reach higher inventory levels of household staples, repeat purchasing will decline. Additionally, as society begins to open up, many (but not all) consumers will return to shopping in stores.

The known impacts experienced by the Postal Service during and after the last recession in 2008-2009 also influence our analysis. During the Great Recession, the Postal Service lost significant mail volume that never returned; total volumes experienced a steep downward step between 2007 and 2009 and thereafter returned to a more gradual decline that has continued ever since. Prior to the recession, the Postal Service had total mail volume of 212B pieces in FY2007. After the recession, the Postal Service had 168B pieces within the system in FY2011, a decline of 20.7% of total mail volume. Mail volume declined by 43.9B pieces and $9.2B in total revenue were lost during this period, with $6.8 billion of revenue lost in 2009 alone.

The final known factor is what mailers are telling us about their short-term plans. For the most part, major mailers are expecting a slow-down in mailing due to the economic impact across the economy. Advertisers have reduced spending, which is having a significant effect on marketing mail, with marketing mail volume down 42.5% in the most recent week.
There are three significant components to the COVID-19 impact that are unknown and make the effects of the pandemic on mail volumes extremely difficult to quantify:

- Depth of the short-term impact during Calendar Q2 and Q3. Specifically, how bad will economic conditions get?
- Duration of the economic impact. This is directly tied to how long the economy remains shuttered and will have a significant influence on FY2021 volumes and revenues.
- Volume levels to which mail returns after the pandemic is concluded. This will influence our financial outlook in future years. It is possible that many companies never return to business and that some portion of our volume will be permanently lost to digital alternatives. (As noted previously, after the Great Recession, a large portion of mail volume never returned and we suffered a permanent decline from FY2007 levels of over 20%).

Each of these components will ultimately be influenced by the degree to which GDP declines in the coming months, the increase in the unemployment rate and the persistence of higher unemployment levels, declines in business and consumer confidence and investment spending (which often significantly lag the beginning of an “official” recovery), and the timing of the reopening of segments of the economy. None of these elements are known or can be predicted with any real degree of certainty at this time. The estimates for GDP decline are diverse, with a recent survey of economists by the Wall Street Journal reporting a median decline in GDP of 26.5% in Postal Quarter 3 (April – June, 2020). In addition, the same survey of economists suggests a median projection for the unemployment rate by June 2020 of 13%. To put that GDP loss in perspective, the Great Recession caused a 3.3% decline in GDP in FY2009; the median decline in GDP projected for this quarter (April – September 2020) is 7 times worse than the worst quarter GDP experienced in the last recession.

These GDP and unemployment projections, when considered in light of the Postal Service’s financial results during the Great Recession, and the most recent volume decline information, have led us to the following initial estimates for the next 18 months, and for the longer-term:

- Short-term impact - Postal Q3 & Q4 (April – September)
  - We expect a significant short-term impact for the remainder of FY2020 due to the economic impact of COVID-19 which will cause projected declines of approximately 50% in volumes in Q3 and 57% in Q4, based on the speed at which volume has already declined, the GDP and unemployment projections estimated by economists and information communicated by mailers.

- Medium-term impact - Fiscal Year 2021 (October 2020 – September 2021)
  - As time moves forward and the economic lock-down begins to lessen, we project a gradual return of volumes beginning in Q1, FY 2021, to about 60% of the corresponding pre-COVID levels in Q1.
  - For the rest of FY 2021, we estimate that volumes will gradually return to about 74% of pre-COVID volume levels. As noted, current projections by economists suggest the economic impact of the pandemic will be worse than the Great Recession (when we permanently lost over 20% of volumes).
  - For the entirety of FY 2021, we estimate that total volume will be approximately 70% of pre-COVID volume levels.

- Long-term impact - Fiscal Year 2022 and beyond

The longer-term projection suggests a return to a “new normal” of about 75% of pre-COVID volume levels, which is slightly worse than the last recession when we returned to a new normal of approximately 80% of pre-recession volumes. We then expect the long-term gradual secular volume declines that we were experiencing prior to the pandemic will resume for the next 10 years.

All of these volume assumptions are dependent on many facets of the COVID-19 disruption that are as yet unknown. For example, the longer the economic lock-down continues and more businesses are disrupted, the higher the likelihood that the level of volume return could be less than currently projected. Likewise, if the economic lock-down retreats in the coming weeks and businesses return to normal quickly, it is possible that the volume levels could be greater than these projections. Ultimately, given the significant uncertainty concerning these matters, our projections, while severe, should not be considered a worst case, because it is conceivable that the impact of COVID-19 on mail volumes could be even more dire than we are anticipating.

Based on these projections, it is expected that the Postal Service’s financial condition will worsen significantly compared to previous estimates. Our current projections, which are based upon the assumptions set forth herein, indicate that the Postal Service will be essentially illiquid in September 2020 if additional cash is not obtained (either through the additional $10B Treasury loan under the CARES Act, or alternative funding mechanisms). At that time, the Postal Service would have less than one payroll of cash remaining (payroll is ~$2B bi-weekly), with a negative cash balance projected for October, when the $1.5B workers’ compensation cash payment is due to the Department of Labor. While previous estimates put this date as early as June, this has been extended until September due to our ability to delay payment of employer Social Security taxes pursuant to the CARES Act (~$1.1B thru September 2020), and our ability to obtain an additional $3.4B from the Federal Financing Bank pursuant to a short-term note that was available to us under our existing statutory borrowing authority. A portion of this note ($400M) must be repaid by September 2020, while the remaining $3B must be repaid by April 2, 2021.

We are in discussions with the Treasury regarding the borrowing authority in the CARES Act, including the terms and conditions that would apply to such borrowing. We anticipate that this borrowing will be provided to us and that we will be required to borrow the full $10 billion that is available, for the reasons noted herein.

However, even with this additional $10B, the Postal Service will continue to face a liquidity crisis in the near-term. Over the next 18 months (to the end of the next fiscal year, September 2021), we project our net loss will increase by $22.8B versus previous projections as a direct result of the impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic. Based upon our current projections, we will run out of cash in April 2021 even if we secure the additional $10B in borrowing under the CARES Act. Finally, over the longer term (10 years), we project our net loss will increase by $54.3B versus previous projections, directly due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Postal Service will continue to take aggressive action to reduce expenses commensurate with these volume declines through overtime and overall workhour reductions, and curtailing of all travel and other discretionary spending. However, due to the impact of COVID-19 on employee availability, the fixity of our network, and the costs associated with the leave provisions of the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, our ability to significantly reduce expenses in the short-run is limited. For instance, any savings associated with reduced workhours are diminished because the new leave provisions of the Families First Coronavirus Relief Act have added additional costs to the Postal Service that are estimated to be approximately $600M-$900M, depending on how many of our employees suffer a qualifying condition related to COVID-19, and on how many of our employees have children and dependents out of school/daycare. Unlike other entities, these expenses are not reimbursable to the Postal Service under the statute. In addition, it is expected that additional supplies and cleaning services required due to COVID-19 could cost the Postal Service over $100M over the next 6 months.

Given the economic uncertainty underlying the pandemic, the Postal Service will continuously monitor and evaluate new information as it becomes available, including current mail volumes, announcements by governments concerning the opening of aspects of the economy, input from our mail and shipping customers, as well as economic projections for the broader economy. This new information will necessitate updates to our forecast and the Postal Service will incorporate on an ongoing basis any relevant new information as it becomes available to ensure we have the most updated assessment of the pandemic on our financial condition.

Legislative Relief Sought from Congress

There is an immediate need for Congress to give the Postal Service relief to address the direct impacts that the COVID-19 pandemic has had and will have on our financial condition, so that we can ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term. To address the impacts of the pandemic, we seek the following four items from Congress:

- $25B in funds to cover the estimated COVID-19 losses over the next two years;
- $25B in funds for modernization, to address the long-term undercapitalization of the Postal Service that has been exacerbated by the pandemic, which will help the Postal Service weather the longer term economic impacts to our business resulting from the pandemic and ensure that our critical infrastructure will be ready to support the Nation for current and future needs;
- Satisfaction of our $14.4B in outstanding debt to the Federal Financing Bank
- Unrestricted borrowing authority up to $25B, by consolidating our existing borrowing authority of $15B under Title 39 of the United States Code, and $10B under the CARES Act, based on streamlined procedures, and by eliminating the $3B annual borrowing limitation.

As noted above, we estimate that the impact of COVID-19 will increase our net losses over the next 18 months by approximately $23B. Our request for $25B is intended to cover these losses, with a small cushion to account for contingencies, and hence to ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term. In this regard, our projections are not the worst case that could happen: in fact, we are not sure where the bottom is in terms of volume declines. As a result, it is important to build in some cushion to help ensure we remain liquid.

The longer-term impact of COVID-19 is estimated at almost $55B. In particular, the severe impact that the pandemic will have on our cash flows over the longer-term, due to the permanent shift in volumes, will exacerbate the fact that we are severely undercapitalized, by requiring us to further defer critically important capital investments. Modernizing our operations and infrastructure, such as through the purchase of new delivery vehicles, automated mail processing equipment, and other capital investments, is essential to our ability to continue providing our vital services to the American people in a prompt, reliable, and efficient manner.
We therefore are requesting $25B to address the impact that the pandemic will have on our ability to modernize our critical operations infrastructure. This will not only have a direct benefit to the American people in terms of ensuring our ability to provide our services, but will also act as a stimulus to the economy as our Nation recovers from the pandemic, as these funds will be used to purchase goods from suppliers in the private sector.

Finally, eliminating our current debt and creating a streamlined borrowing process moving forward will give the Postal Service immediate financial relief, as well as critical flexibility to ensure our continued ability to operate in the short-term. We propose that future borrowings from Treasury or the Federal Financing Bank occur through the framework of the note purchase agreement through which we borrowed funds from Federal Financing Bank for the past two decades. The note purchase agreement provided a streamlined mechanism for such borrowings, and gives the Postal Service needed certainty as to its ability to readily access cash. In addition, the agreement sets forth reasonable and appropriate terms and conditions that protects the interests of both the Postal Service and Treasury.

While this immediate action by Congress is critical to ensuring that we can withstand the direct impacts of the pandemic in the near term, it is important to note that it will not resolve the fundamental problems with the Postal Service’s business model, or restore the Postal Service to longer-term financial stability. In fact, this short-term relief will only allow us to maintain operations until 2023, if provided in full.

The Postal Service operates under a statutory and regulatory structure that does not give us sufficient flexibility to reduce costs and increase revenue to meet the challenges of the secular decline in the use of the mail. The Board also believes that it is important that Congress eventually act to address these business model issues, to ensure that the Postal Service can be financially stable over the next 10 years, though to be clear this is not something we are seeking immediately. That said, within the next 12-18 months, the Board also recommends that Congress will need to enact financial reforms that give us greater pricing and product flexibility, as well as the ability to address our retiree health benefits program, which is not properly integrated with Medicare, and our unaffordable pension payment obligations. Absent such reforms, which we believe have broad support among postal stakeholders, it would be necessary for the Board to adopt more significant and controversial structural reforms to ensure our ability to survive over the next 10 years.

Conclusion

The lives of the American public have changed dramatically over the last several weeks, and it is during difficult times when the true value of the Postal Service to the nation is most evident. One of our strengths as an organization is our stabilizing role in a crisis: the American people take confidence from our regular, daily role in their community and in their lives. We are proud of the heroism shown by our employees during this pandemic, by their steadfast determination to continue working every day to provide our vital service to the American people. Our request to Congress for the short-term financial relief discussed in this letter is designed to ensure that we can continue to serve the essential needs of the American people as a part of the nation’s critical infrastructure.

Please let us know if you have any questions regarding this letter, and we look forward to continuing to work with you and the Administration in addressing the Postal Service’s financial challenges, and in preserving this great American institution.

ALL OTHER BOARD MEMBERS
Dear Representative/Senator ___,

We are writing to share with you the actions the United States Postal Service is taking to meet the needs of the American public and to protect our employees and customers as our nation responds to the Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic, and to also inform you of the serious impacts that the pandemic is having on the Postal Service’s financial condition.

As you know, our Board is comprised of both Republicans and Democrats, and we take pride in operating in a very bipartisan manner. We thank President Trump for appointing, and the Senate for confirming, a Board whose members bring unique capabilities, diverse perspectives, and broad experiences, and who are all committed to putting personal politics aside to represent the public interest and to ensure that the Postal Service continues to provide its essential services for the American people, both today and in the years to come. Since taking office, the Board has worked extensively to craft a plan to address the Postal Service’s financial condition, a process that has taken on new urgency considering the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the Postal Service. The $10 billion of additional borrowing authority provided in the CARES Act is a good start, and we also thank the Administration and Congress for taking that important action. However, as detailed below, this additional authority is not sufficient to address the near-term liquidity crisis that the Postal Service is facing as a result of the pandemic, which requires Congress to take further immediate action to ensure our continued ability to provide our critical services. Below, we address our recommendations to Congress for both immediate and longer-term relief, which have been adopted unanimously by the Board.

The Board and Postal Service management team, along with the 630,000 employees of the Postal Service, remain highly focused on our mission of binding the nation together and providing the American people with prompt, reliable, and universal postal delivery services. Our mission has never been more important than now, as Americans shelter in place, work from home, or otherwise practice social distancing. We operate by statute as a “basic and fundamental service” provided by the Federal Government to the American people. In addition, the continued provision of postal services is designated as an essential function of the Government during times of emergency pursuant to the framework of the National Continuity Policy, and the postal sector is also designated by the Department of Homeland Security as part of the nation’s critical infrastructure. Six days per week, and in some instances seven, the men and women of the Postal Service accept, process, transport, and deliver important mail and vital packages, including important governmental information and benefits such as Census materials, social security and stimulus checks, and materials advising the public about COVID-19; materials relating to elections, including absentee ballots and political mail; materials that are essential to the functioning of our economy, such as transactional mail; and packages containing sustaining necessities, including medicines and other goods purchased online.

We are proud of the essential services that the Postal Service provides to the American people, and of the fact that the Postal Service consistently receives the highest public approval ratings
of any entity of the Federal Government. Indeed a recent survey by the Pew Research Center released on April 9 shows that an overwhelming 91 percent of respondents have a favorable view of USPS, and this favorable opinion is shared nearly equally by Republicans and Democrats alike. This standing with the American people is based in no small part on the Postal Service’s nonpartisan, nonpolitical and equalitarian nature. In that regard, you can be assured that the Board fully recognizes that it is vital to the achievement of the Postal Service’s mission that there is no actual or appearance of political bias or partiality on the part of the Postal Service. As such, we will be vigilant to ensure that the Postal Service does not endorse the political activities of any group, and we will continue to take appropriate legal and other actions to ensure that no group uses our trademarks or other intellectual property in connection with their political activities to suggest or infer that the Postal Service supports their political viewpoints. The Postal Service will remain politically neutral, nonpartisan, unbiased, and impartial, and we will not allow this great American institution to be misused as a part of the partisan political fray.

Postal Service Response to the Pandemic

The Board has also been holding meetings and briefings at regular intervals to receive the latest information and provide strategic direction to management on responding to the pandemic. We have established a dedicated COVID-19 Command Response leadership team to direct employee, operational, business, and customer continuity efforts during this extraordinary time. We are fully committed to being a source of consistency and reliability for American households and businesses throughout this national emergency, and to ensuring that the public can confidently depend upon our mailing and shipping services, both today and in the future. As we provide our vital service, we have been adjusting our policies and operating procedures in a manner consistent with the advice of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), and other public health officials.

In this regard, the specific measures we have implemented in response to the COVID-19 outbreak include the following:

Keeping our employees safe. The essential services we provide are only possible due to the collective and individual efforts of the dedicated public servants who work for the Postal Service. We are doing everything that we can to protect the health and safety of our employees while they are performing their jobs, in a manner consistent with the advice of medical and public health professionals. To achieve this goal, the COVID-19 Command Response team at Headquarters is working closely with HHS, CDC, and other public health officials to receive their latest guidance on appropriate workplace practices. We are adjusting our policies accordingly, and are continually sharing the latest information throughout our organization. Specific actions we have taken include the following:

- Updated our leave policies to allow liberal use of leave, and to therefore give our employees the ability to stay home whenever they feel sick, must provide dependent care, or wish to abide by State or local shelter-in-place requirements. We have been actively encouraging any employee who feels sick to stay home. To facilitate their ability to do so, we entered into MOUs even in advance of the Families First Coronavirus Response Act with our unions and management associations to provide 80 hours of paid leave to employees, including non-career employees, for issues related to COVID-19. We expanded the definition of Sick Leave for Dependent Care for all employees to deal with the cascading closures of primary and secondary schools across the country. While we have taken these steps on our own initiative, we have also ensured that employees will also receive the emergency leave authorized by the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, in addition to what they otherwise have accrued.

- Worked to overcome the challenges in the supply chain to ensure that our employees have ready access to hand sanitizer, and that they receive surgical masks and gloves upon request. This has been a matter of the highest priority for the Postal Service throughout the pandemic. We have shipped over 18 million masks throughout the country to ensure that they are available for our employees, and are working tirelessly to keep the supply chain for critical personal protective equipment flowing in the face of national challenges.

- Reinforced workplace behaviors to ensure that contact amongst our employees and with our customers reflects the best guidance regarding healthy interactions, social distancing, and risk minimization. We have implemented measures at retail facilities and mail processing facilities to ensure appropriate social distancing, including through signage, floor tape, and “cough/sneeze” barriers. We have also changed our delivery procedures to ensure the appropriate social distancing between our letter carriers and customers, such as by eliminating the customer signature requirement for certain deliveries. We are strongly encouraging the use of facial coverings in those environments where social distancing is difficult to maintain, and will continue to evaluate our policies in that regard in light of the evolving circumstances.

- Updated our cleaning policies to ensure that all cleaning in our facilities occurs in a manner consistent with CDC guidance relating to this pandemic.

- Expanded the use of telework for those employees who are able to perform their jobs remotely.

- Issued and continue to issue a daily cadence of communications to employees to ensure they have the latest information and guidance.

Keeping our customers safe. The CDC, the World Health Organization, as well as the U.S. Surgeon General have all said that there is very low risk that this virus is being spread through mail, which should be a comfort to the public. We are also adapting procedures to ensure that we are able to continue to provide service effectively and safely. As noted above, we are reinforcing workplace behaviors to ensure that contact between our employees and customers reflect the best guidance regarding healthy interactions, social distancing, and risk minimization. We are additionally taking steps to ensure that customers can safely come to our retail facilities, such as by limiting the number of individuals who can be in a lobby at any one time, and employing floor tape to ensure that customers waiting in line can maintain the appropriate distance from one another, and from the retail counter.

Network integrity/continuity of operations. The Postal Service is undertaking all reasonable measures to minimize impacts to our customers. Following our normal protocol, we began daily operational assessments and responses as the situation in China was first identified, and are coordinating organization-wide efforts to respond to evolving conditions, and to anticipate and prepare for customer and community needs throughout the country. We are highly confident in our ability to process and deliver the nation’s mail and packages throughout this emergency. We do not expect significant lasting disruption or degradation in the services we provide in the domestic market, though we do anticipate that adjusting local operations in certain areas may be necessary to account for absent employees and other local contingencies, and that such adjustments will likely have temporary service impacts. If, for some reason, we need to curtail or adjust operations in a particular facility or area, activation of localized continuity of operations plans will be implemented to provide required support – similar to planning we implement in the wake of hurricanes, flooding, wildfires and other disruptive events. In addition, given the impact of the pandemic on the availability of transportation, we have also been required to temporarily adjust our service standards for certain of our package products, and we have had to curtail operations to some foreign destinations where transportation is unavailable.

All-government emergency response. The Postal Service is playing an integral role in national emergency response and preparedness. The Postal Service is participating in the National Response Coordination Center (NRCC) headed by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), and will continue to assist FEMA and other agencies in the whole-of-government response to the pandemic. The Postal Service has unique capabilities in this regard, because of our role as the most frequent touchpoint between the American people and the federal government through our nationwide retail and delivery network. For instance, we have leveraged our network to communicate CDC guidance to the public, both by displaying CDC posters in our retail facilities, by providing key information through our digital message boards in our large Post Offices, and by working with the Administration to help design and deliver a postcard from the President to every American household that relayed the key CDC guidance and that informed the recipients about the CDC’s COVID-19 specific website.

Further, we have also donated and delivered 500,000 N-95 masks (which are different from the masks that our employees utilize) that were in excess of our needs to the Department of Health and Human Services for the Strategic National Stockpile for distribution to hospitals and other critical uses. Additionally, we are prepared to assist as necessary with the distribution of other personal protective equipment as a part of the Administration’s pandemic response. Finally, we will be delivering information concerning the stimulus checks that were provided as a part of the CARES Act, and we will also be delivering the physical checks to those who will not be receiving them through direct deposit.

Impact of the Pandemic on the Postal Service’s Financial Condition

While the criticality of the services the Postal Service provides has never been more evident, and we are committed to continuing to fulfill our essential universal service mission, the COVID-19 pandemic has also had drastic impacts on our financial condition. We have experienced significant and sudden declines in mail volume and revenue due to the pandemic. The result is a liquidity crisis that requires immediate action by Congress to ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term.

Our projections of the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic are grounded in three knowns and a significant number of unknowns. The three knowns include what is currently happening with mail volumes, the impact of the last recession (i.e., the Great Recession) on the Postal Service’s volume after GDP growth resumed, and what mailers are communicating to the Postal Service regarding their short-term plans.

The first known is what is currently happening with mail volumes. We are seeing a significant decline across mail products, with growth in packages. All percentages describe the change in mail volume from the same period last year. During the first week of the COVID-impact (March 16-March 21), the Postal Service saw total delivered mail volume (consisting of letters and flats) decline by 5.3%, and these declines have accelerated significantly since then, as follows:

- The week of March 22nd total delivered mail volume declined by 7.5%
- The week of March 29th total delivered mail volume declined by 24.2%
The week of April 5th total delivered mail volume declined by 32.2%.

UPDATE FOR ADDITIONAL WEEKS?

Delivered packages have shown a growth trajectory which has been offsetting a portion of the mail revenues lost in recent weeks. The first week of the COVID-impact (March 16-March 21), the Postal Service saw delivered package volume decline by 1.0%, but since then packages have grown significantly, as follows:

- The week of March 22nd total delivered package volume grew by 5.0%
- The week of March 29th total delivered package volume increased by 11.8%
- The week of April 5th total delivered package volume increased by 20.7%.

UPDATE FOR ADDITIONAL WEEKS?

However, package growth cannot fully counteract the impact of the mail volume declines we are experiencing. In addition, although package growth has accelerated, our current projection is that this trend will not continue and we will likely have declines in packages in the upcoming months. The reasons for this belief are as follows:

- First, some of our customers are already expressing concerns about what they are reading concerning our financial condition and stability, and are pursuing alternatives to move and deliver their products.
- Second, the significant decline in GDP and the increase in the unemployment rate and the resulting decline in consumer income will likely lead to less consumer spending and a decline in the overall package market.
- Third, package growth will also be likely be impacted by supply chain disruptions across the system, as shortages due to production and transportation disruptions, not only in the U.S, but throughout the world, ripple through the economy, thus reducing package volume.
- Finally, much of the package growth seen in recent weeks was fueled by consumers stocking up on basic needed household items and stockpiling food. Much of this spending was funneled through e-commerce because consumers did not want to physically shop in stores. As consumers reach higher inventory levels of household staples, repeat purchasing will decline. Additionally, as society begins to open up, many (but not all) consumers will return to shopping in stores.

The known impacts experienced by the Postal Service during and after the last recession in 2008-2009 also influence our analysis. During the Great Recession, the Postal Service lost significant mail volume that never returned; total volumes experienced a steep downward step between 2007 and 2009 and thereafter returned to a more gradual decline that has continued ever since. Prior to the recession, the Postal Service had total mail volume of 212B pieces in FY2007. After the recession, the Postal Service had 168B pieces within the system in FY2011, a decline of 20.7% of total mail volume. Mail volume declined by 43.9B pieces and $9.2B in total revenue were lost during this period, with $6.8 billion of revenue lost in 2009 alone.

The final known factor is what mailers are telling us about their short-term plans. For the most part, major mailers are expecting a slow-down in mailing due to the economic impact across the economy. Advertisers have reduced spending, which is having a significant effect on marketing mail, with marketing mail volume down 42.5% in the most recent week.
There are three significant components to the COVID-19 impact that are unknown and make the effects of the pandemic on mail volumes extremely difficult to quantify:

- Depth of the short-term impact during Calendar Q2 and Q3. Specifically, how bad will economic conditions get?
- Duration of the economic impact. This is directly tied to how long the economy remains shuttered and will have a significant influence on FY2021 volumes and revenues.
- Volume levels to which mail returns after the pandemic is concluded. This will influence our financial outlook in future years. It is possible that many companies never return to business and that some portion of our volume will be permanently lost to digital alternatives. (As noted previously, after the Great Recession, a large portion of mail volume never returned and we suffered a permanent decline from FY2007 levels of over 20%).

Each of these components will ultimately be influenced by the degree to which GDP declines in the coming months, the increase in the unemployment rate and the persistence of higher unemployment levels, declines in business and consumer confidence and investment spending (which often significantly lag the beginning of an “official” recovery), and the timing of the reopening of segments of the economy. None of these elements are known or can be predicted with any real degree of certainty at this time. The estimates for GDP decline are diverse, with a recent survey of economists by the Wall Street Journal reporting a median decline in GDP of 26.5% in Postal Quarter 3 (April – June, 2020). In addition, the same survey of economists suggests a median projection for the unemployment rate by June 2020 of 13%. To put that GDP loss in perspective, the Great Recession caused a 3.3% decline in GDP in FY2009; the median decline in GDP projected for this quarter (April – September 2020) is 7 times worse than the worst quarter GDP experienced in the last recession.

These GDP and unemployment projections, when considered in light of the Postal Service’s financial results during the Great Recession, and the most recent volume decline information, have led us to the following initial estimates for the next 18 months, and for the longer-term:

- Short-term impact - Postal Q3 & Q4 (April – September)
  - We expect a significant short-term impact for the remainder of FY2020 due to the economic impact of COVID-19 which will cause projected declines of approximately 50% in volumes in Q3 and 57% in Q4, based on the speed at which volume has already declined, the GDP and unemployment projections estimated by economists and information communicated by mailers.

- Medium-term impact - Fiscal Year 2021 (October 2020 – September 2021)
  - As time moves forward and the economic lock-down begins to lessen, we project a gradual return of volumes beginning in Q1, FY 2021, to about 60% of the corresponding pre-COVID levels in Q1.
  - For the rest of FY 2021, we estimate that volumes will gradually return to about 74% of pre-COVID volume levels. As noted, current projections by economists suggest the economic impact of the pandemic will be worse than the Great Recession (when we permanently lost over 20% of volumes).
  - For the entirety of FY 2021, we estimate that total volume will be approximately 70% of pre-COVID volume levels.

- Long-term impact - Fiscal Year 2022 and beyond

1 WSJ Survey of Economists - https://www.wsj.com/graphics/econsurvey/
The longer-term projection suggests a return to a “new normal” of about 75% of pre-COVID volume levels, which is slightly worse than the last recession when we returned to a new normal of approximately 80% of pre-recession volumes. We then expect the long-term gradual secular volume declines that we were experiencing prior to the pandemic will resume for the next 10 years.

All of these volume assumptions are dependent on many facets of the COVID-19 disruption that are as yet unknown. For example, the longer the economic lock-down continues and more businesses are disrupted, the higher the likelihood that the level of volume return could be less than currently projected. Likewise, if the economic lock-down retreats in the coming weeks and businesses return to normal quickly, it is possible that the volume levels could be greater than these projections. Ultimately, given the significant uncertainty concerning these matters, our projections, while severe, should not be considered a worst case, because it is conceivable that the impact of COVID-19 on mail volumes could be even more dire than we are anticipating.

Based on these projections, it is expected that the Postal Service’s financial condition will worsen significantly compared to previous estimates. Our current projections, which are based upon the assumptions set forth herein, indicate that the Postal Service will be essentially illiquid in September 2020 if additional cash is not obtained (either through the additional $10B Treasury loan under the CARES Act, or alternative funding mechanisms). At that time, the Postal Service would have less than one payroll of cash remaining (payroll is ~$2B bi-weekly), with a negative cash balance projected for October, when the $1.5B workers’ compensation cash payment is due to the Department of Labor. While previous estimates put this date as early as June, this has been extended until September due to our ability to delay payment of employer Social Security taxes pursuant to the CARES Act (~$1.1B thru September 2020), and our ability to obtain an additional $3.4B from the Federal Financing Bank pursuant to a short-term note that was available to us under our existing statutory borrowing authority. A portion of this note ($400M) must be repaid by September 2020, while the remaining $3B must be repaid by April 2, 2021.

We are in discussions with the Treasury regarding the borrowing authority in the CARES Act, including the terms and conditions that would apply to such borrowing. We anticipate that this borrowing will be provided to us and that we will be required to borrow the full $10 billion that is available, for the reasons noted herein.

However, even with this additional $10B, the Postal Service will continue to face a liquidity crisis in the near-term. Over the next 18 months (to the end of the next fiscal year, September 2021), we project our net loss will increase by $22.8B versus previous projections as a direct result of the impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic. Based upon our current projections, we will run out of cash in April 2021 even if we secure the additional $10B in borrowing under the CARES Act. Finally, over the longer term (10 years), we project our net loss will increase by $54.3B versus previous projections, directly due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Postal Service will continue to take aggressive action to reduce expenses commensurate with these volume declines through overtime and overall workhour reductions, and curtailing of all travel and other discretionary spending. However, due to the impact of COVID-19 on employee availability, the fixity of our network, and the costs associated with the leave provisions of the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, our ability to significantly reduce expenses in the short-run is limited. For instance, any savings associated with reduced workhours are diminished because the new leave provisions of the Families First Coronavirus Relief Act have added additional costs to the Postal Service that are estimated to be approximately $600M-$900M, depending on how many of our employees suffer a qualifying condition related to COVID-19, and on how many of our employees have children and dependents out of school/daycare. Unlike other entities, these expenses are not reimbursable to the Postal Service under the statute. In addition, it is expected that additional supplies and cleaning services required due to COVID-19 could cost the Postal Service over $100M over the next 6 months.

Given the economic uncertainty underlying the pandemic, the Postal Service will continuously monitor and evaluate new information as it becomes available, including current mail volumes, announcements by governments concerning the opening of aspects of the economy, input from our mail and shipping customers, as well as economic projections for the broader economy. This new information will necessitate updates to our forecast and the Postal Service will incorporate on an ongoing basis any relevant new information as it becomes available to ensure we have the most updated assessment of the pandemic on our financial condition.

Legislative Relief Sought from Congress

There is an immediate need for Congress to give the Postal Service relief to address the direct impacts that the COVID-19 pandemic has had and will have on our financial condition, so that we can ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term. To address the impacts of the pandemic, we seek the following four items from Congress:

- $25B in funds to cover the estimated COVID-19 losses over the next two years;
- $25B in funds for modernization, to address the long-term undercapitalization of the Postal Service that has been exacerbated by the pandemic, which will help the Postal Service weather the longer term economic impacts to our business resulting from the pandemic and ensure that our critical infrastructure will be ready to support the Nation for current and future needs;
- Satisfaction of our $14.4B in outstanding debt to the Federal Financing Bank
- Unrestricted borrowing authority up to $25B, by consolidating our existing borrowing authority of $15B under Title 39 of the United States Code, and $10B under the CARES Act, based on streamlined procedures, and by eliminating the $3B annual borrowing limitation.

As noted above, we estimate that the impact of COVID-19 will increase our net losses over the next 18 months by approximately $23B. Our request for $25B is intended to cover these losses, with a small cushion to account for contingencies, and hence to ensure our continued ability to operate in the near term. In this regard, our projections are not the worst case that could happen: in fact, we are not sure where the bottom is in terms of volume declines. As a result, it is important to build in some cushion to help ensure we remain liquid.

The longer-term impact of COVID-19 is estimated at almost $55B. In particular, the severe impact that the pandemic will have on our cash flows over the longer-term, due to the permanent shift in volumes, will exacerbate the fact that we are severely undercapitalized, by requiring us to further defer critically important capital investments. Modernizing our operations and infrastructure, such as through the purchase of new delivery vehicles, automated mail processing equipment, and other capital investments, is essential to our ability to continue providing our vital services to the American people in a prompt, reliable, and efficient manner.
We therefore are requesting $25B to address the impact that the pandemic will have on our ability to modernize our critical operations infrastructure. This will not only have a direct benefit to the American people in terms of ensuring our ability to provide our services, but will also act as a stimulus to the economy as our Nation recovers from the pandemic, as these funds will be used to purchase goods from suppliers in the private sector.

Finally, eliminating our current debt and creating a streamlined borrowing process moving forward will give the Postal Service immediate financial relief, as well as critical flexibility to ensure our continued ability to operate in the short-term. We propose that future borrowings from Treasury or the Federal Financing Bank occur through the framework of the note purchase agreement through which we borrowed funds from Federal Financing Bank for the past two decades. The note purchase agreement provided a streamlined mechanism for such borrowings, and gives the Postal Service needed certainty as to its ability to readily access cash. In addition, the agreement sets forth reasonable and appropriate terms and conditions that protects the interests of both the Postal Service and Treasury.

While this immediate action by Congress is critical to ensuring that we can withstand the direct impacts of the pandemic in the near term, it is important to note that it will not resolve the fundamental problems with the Postal Service’s business model, or restore the Postal Service to longer-term financial stability. In fact, this short-term relief will only allow us to maintain operations until 2023, if provided in full.

The Postal Service operates under a statutory and regulatory structure that does not give us sufficient flexibility to reduce costs and increase revenue to meet the challenges of the secular decline in the use of the mail. The Board also believes that it is important that Congress eventually act to address these business model issues, to ensure that the Postal Service can be financially stable over the next 10 years, though to be clear this is not something we are seeking immediately. That said, within the next 12-18 months, the Board also recommends that Congress will need to enact financial reforms that give us greater pricing and product flexibility, as well as the ability to address our retiree health benefits program, which is not properly integrated with Medicare, and our unaffordable pension payment obligations. Absent such reforms, which we believe have broad support among postal stakeholders, it would be necessary for the Board to adopt more significant and controversial structural reforms to ensure our ability to survive over the next 10 years.

Conclusion

The lives of the American public have changed dramatically over the last several weeks, and it is during difficult times when the true value of the Postal Service to the nation is most evident. One of our strengths as an organization is our stabilizing role in a crisis: the American people take confidence from our regular, daily role in their community and in their lives. We are proud of the heroism shown by our employees during this pandemic, by their steadfast determination to continue working every day to provide our vital service to the American people. Our request to Congress for the short-term financial relief discussed in this letter is designed to ensure that we can continue to serve the essential needs of the American people as a part of the nation’s critical infrastructure.

Please let us know if you have any questions regarding this letter, and we look forward to continuing to work with you and the Administration in addressing the Postal Service’s financial challenges, and in preserving this great American institution.

- Active engagement with stakeholders to ensure message discipline and accuracy;
- In the event the stimulus hasn’t been enacted by mid-May, leverage open BOG session and financial call to reiterate argumentation and update on volume declines.

Pros and Cons
• Pros – Focuses media and policymakers on urgent Postal Service financial state and needs; can reinforce perceived value and strong public support for the organization. Ideally, while the Postal Service is directly playing a role as an advocate for the financial stability of the organization, there will be other voices amplifying key facts and messages.

• Cons – There is always a great risk to the brand in focusing public attention to financial problems and of the need for what may be characterized as a bailout – although this is highly mitigated by the fact that nearly every industry is hard hit and experiencing significant problems. Nevertheless, mail and package senders may lose disproportionate confidence in the Postal Service as a result of survivability and financial failure questions, and make over reactive decisions to minimize investment in their use of the mail. There is also the risk of the Postal Service getting caught between WH and congressional policy agendas, and becoming the focus of sustained public criticism as a result.

Dear Representative/Senator ___.

We are writing to share with you the perspective of the Board of Governors of the United States Postal Service as we address the challenges of the Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic, which is having profound impacts on the Postal Service even as our public service mission to the American people is more important than ever. We also want to provide you with our recommendations for short-term financial relief to counteract the direct impacts of the pandemic on the Postal Service, which our Board has unanimously approved. Those recommendations are set forth in the white paper which is attached to this letter.

As you know, our Board is comprised of both Republicans and Democrats, and we take great pride in operating in a very bipartisan manner. We thank President Trump for appointing, and the Senate for confirming, a Board whose members bring unique capabilities, diverse perspectives, and broad experiences, and who are all committed to putting personal politics aside to represent the public interest and to ensure that the Postal Service continues to provide its essential services for the American people, both today and in the years to come.

The Board has been holding meetings and briefings at regular intervals to receive the latest information and to provide strategic direction to management on responding to the pandemic. We, along with the Postal Service management team and our dedicated employees, remain focused on achieving our mission in these difficult times, by continuing to provide the American people with prompt, reliable, and efficient postal services. We are also committed to doing whatever we can to leverage the Postal Service’s unrivaled network to assist in the Government’s response to this national emergency.

Since taking office, the Board has also worked extensively to craft a plan to address the Postal Service’s financial condition. This process that has taken on new urgency considering the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the Postal Service. The $10 billion of additional borrowing authority provided in the CARES Act is a good start, and we also thank the Administration and Congress for taking that important action.

However, this additional authority is not sufficient to address the near-term liquidity crisis that the Postal Service is facing as a result of the pandemic, which requires Congress to take further immediate action to ensure our continued ability to provide our critical services. The Board has unanimously adopted recommendations to Congress for both immediate and longer-term relief, which is discussed more fully in the attached White Paper, and which the bipartisan Board unanimously endorses. We urge the Congress and the Administration to adopt these recommendations.

We are proud of the essential services that the Postal Service provides to the American people, and of the fact that the Postal Service consistently receives the highest public approval ratings of any entity of the Federal Government. Indeed, a recent survey by the Pew Research Center released on April 9 shows that an overwhelming 91 percent of respondents have a favorable view of USPS, and this favorable opinion is shared nearly equally by Republicans and Democrats alike. This standing with the American people is based in no small part on the Postal Service’s nonpartisan, nonpolitical and equalitarian nature. In that regard, you can be assured that the Board fully recognizes that it is vital to the achievement of the Postal Service’s mission that there is no actual or appearance of political bias or partiality on the part of the Postal Service. As such, we will be vigilant to ensure that the Postal Service does not endorse the political activities of any group, and we will continue to take appropriate legal and other actions to ensure that no group uses our trademarks or other intellectual property in connection with their political activities to suggest or infer that the Postal Service supports their political viewpoints. The Postal Service will remain politically neutral, nonpartisan, unbiased, and impartial, and we will not allow this great American institution to be misused as a part of the partisan political fray.

We are proud of the heroism shown by our employees during this pandemic, by their steadfast determination to continue working every day to provide our vital service to the American people. Our request to Congress for financial relief that is more fully described in the attached White Paper is designed to ensure that the Postal Service can continue to serve the essential needs of the American people as a part of the nation’s critical infrastructure.

Please let us know if you have any questions regarding this letter or our request for additional financial relief. We look forward to continuing to work with you and the Administration in addressing the Postal Service’s financial challenges, and in preserving this great American institution.

The Postal Service will remain politically neutral, nonpartisan, unbiased, and impartial, and we will not allow this great American institution to be misused as a part of the partisan political fray.

We are proud of the heroism shown by our employees during this pandemic, by their steadfast determination to continue working every day to provide our vital service to the American people. Our request to Congress for financial relief that is more fully described in the attached White Paper is designed to ensure that the Postal Service can continue to serve the essential needs of the American people as a part of the nation's critical infrastructure.

Please let us know if you have any questions regarding this letter or our request for additional financial relief. We look forward to continuing to work with you and the Administration in addressing the Postal Service's financial challenges, and in preserving this great American institution.

Dear Representative/Senator ___,

We are writing to share with you the perspective of the Board of Governors of the United States Postal Service as we address the challenges of the Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic, which is having profound impacts on the Postal Service even as our public service mission to the American people is more important than ever. We also want to provide you with our recommendations for short-term financial relief to counteract the direct impacts of the pandemic on the Postal Service, which our Board has unanimously approved. Those recommendations are set forth in the white paper which is attached to this letter.

As you know, our Board is comprised of both Republicans and Democrats, and we take great pride in operating in a very bipartisan manner. We thank President Trump for appointing, and the Senate for confirming, a Board whose members bring unique capabilities, diverse perspectives, and broad experiences, and who are all committed to putting personal politics aside to represent the public interest and to ensure that the Postal Service continues to provide its essential services for the American people, both today and in the years to come.

The Board has been holding meetings and briefings at regular intervals to receive the latest information and to provide strategic direction to management on responding to the pandemic. We, along with the Postal Service management team and our dedicated employees, remain focused on achieving our mission in these difficult times, by continuing to provide the American people with prompt, reliable, and efficient postal services. We are also committed to doing whatever we can to leverage the Postal Service’s unrivaled network to assist in the Government’s response to this national emergency.

Since taking office, the Board has also worked extensively to craft a plan to address the Postal Service’s financial condition. This process that has taken on new urgency considering the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the Postal Service. The $10 billion of additional borrowing authority provided in the CARES Act is a good start, and we also thank the Administration and Congress for taking that important action.

However, this additional authority is not sufficient to address the near-term liquidity crisis that the Postal Service is facing as a result of the pandemic, which requires Congress to take further immediate action to ensure our continued ability to provide our critical services. The Board has unanimously adopted recommendations to Congress for both immediate and longer-term relief, which is discussed more fully in the attached White Paper, and which the bipartisan Board unanimously endorses. We urge the Congress and the Administration to adopt these recommendations.

We are proud of the essential services that the Postal Service provides to the American people, and of the fact that the Postal Service consistently receives the highest public approval ratings of any entity of the Federal Government. Indeed, a recent survey by the Pew Research Center released on April 9 shows that an overwhelming 91 percent of respondents have a favorable view of USPS, and this favorable opinion is shared nearly equally by Republicans and Democrats alike. This standing with the American people is based in no small part on the Postal Service’s nonpartisan, nonpolitical and equalitarian nature. In that regard, you can be assured that the Board fully recognizes that it is vital to the achievement of the Postal Service’s mission that there is no actual or appearance of political bias or partiality on the part of the Postal Service. As such, we will be vigilant to ensure that the Postal Service does not endorse the political activities of any group, and we will continue to take appropriate legal and other actions to ensure that no group uses our trademarks or other intellectual property in connection with their political activities to suggest or infer that the Postal Service supports their political viewpoints. The Postal Service will remain politically neutral, nonpartisan, unbiased, and impartial, and we will not allow this great American institution to be misused as a part of the partisan political fray.

Dear Representative/Senator ____,

I am writing to share with you the actions the United States Postal Service is taking to meet the needs of the public and to protect our employees as our nation responds to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Postal Service Board of Governors and management team, along with the 630,000 employees of the Postal Service, remain highly focused on our mission of binding the nation together and providing the American people with prompt, reliable, and universal postal delivery services. Our mission has never been more important than now, as more and more Americans are being asked to shelter in place and to work from home. We operate by statute as a “basic and fundamental service” provided by the Federal Government to the American people, and the continued provision of postal services is designated both as an essential function under federal law during times of emergency and as part of the nation's critical infrastructure. Every day, the men and women of the Postal Service accept, process, transport, and deliver vital mail and packages, including important governmental information and benefits such as Census materials, social security checks, and materials advising the public on COVID-19; materials relating to elections, including ballots and political mail; materials that are essential to the functioning of our economy, such as transactional mail; and packages containing vital necessities, including medicines and other goods purchased online.

To ensure that we continue providing this critical government service, we have established a dedicated COVID-19 Command Response leadership team to direct employee, operational, business, and customer continuity efforts during this extraordinary time. We are fully committed to being a source of consistency and reliability for American households and businesses throughout this national emergency, and to ensuring that the public can confidently depend upon our mailing and shipping services. We intend to act calmly and consistently based upon the advice of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), and other public health officials as we provide our vital service.
